

Women from Traditional Islamic Educational Institutions in Indonesia

Negotiating Public Spaces

EKA SRIMULYANI

AMSTERDAM UNIVERSITY PRESS

Women from Traditional Islamic Educational Institutions in Indonesia

PUBLICATIONS SERIES

General Editor

Paul van der Velde

Publications Officer

Martina van den Haak

Editorial Board

Prasenjit Duara (Asia Research Institute, National University of Singapore) / Carol Gluck (Columbia University) / Christophe Jaffrelot (Centre d'Études et de Recherches Internationales-Sciences-po) / Victor T. King (University of Leeds) / Yuri Sadoi (Meijo University) / A.B. Shamsul (Institute of Occidental Studies / Universiti Kebangsaan Malaysia) / Henk Schulte Nordholt (Royal Netherlands Institute of Southeast Asian and Caribbean Studies) / Wim Boot (Leiden University)

The IIAS Publications Series consists of Monographs and Edited Volumes. The Series publishes results of research projects conducted at the International Institute for Asian Studies. Furthermore, the aim of the Series is to promote interdisciplinary studies on Asia and comparative research on Asia and Europe.

The International Institute for Asian Studies (IIAS) is a postdoctoral research centre based in Leiden and Amsterdam, the Netherlands. Its objective is to encourage the interdisciplinary and comparative study of Asia and to promote national and international cooperation. The institute focuses on the humanities and social sciences and, where relevant, on their interaction with other sciences. It stimulates scholarship on Asia and is instrumental in forging research networks among Asia scholars worldwide.

IIAS acts as an international mediator, bringing various parties together, working as a clearinghouse of knowledge and information. This entails activities such as providing information services, hosting academic organisations dealing with Asia, constructing international networks, and setting up international cooperative projects and research programmes. In this way, IIAS functions as a window on Europe for non-European scholars and contributes to the cultural rapprochement between Asia and Europe.

For further information, please visit www.ias.nl.

Women from Traditional Islamic Educational Institutions in Indonesia

Negotiating Public Spaces

Eka Srimulyani

AMSTERDAM UNIVERSITY PRESS

PUBLICATIONS SERIES

MONOGRAPHS 8

Cover illustration: Women studied kitab kuning (classical Islamic text books) in a religious congregation (photographed by Eka Srimulyani).

Cover design: Maedium, Utrecht Layout: The DocWorkers, Almere

ISBN 978 90 8964 421 3
e-ISBN 978 90 4851 621 6 (pdf)
e-ISBN 978 90 4851 622 3 (ePub)
NUR 717 / 761

© IIAS / Amsterdam University Press, Amsterdam 2012

All rights reserved. Without limiting the rights under copyright reserved above, no part of this book may be reproduced, stored in or introduced into a retrieval system, or transmitted, in any form or by any means (electronic, mechanical, photocopying, recording or otherwise) without the written permission of both the copyright owners and the author of the book.

Table of Contents

Acknowledgements	7
Glossary and Abbreviations	11
Table of Figures	13
1 Introduction: Why Study Women and Pesantren?	15
Brief Background	15
[Muslim] Women in Indonesia	19
Gender and Javanese Values	22
Why Women and Pesantren ?	25
Women's Issues in Education	31
Brief Description of the Research	32
Book Chapters	34
2 Women and Pesantren Education: History, Kinship, and Contents	37
Women and Education in Indonesia	37
Tracing Women's Paths in Pesantrens	40
Nyai of Pesantren : 'Santri ibuism'?	47
Do Pesantrens Preserve Patriarchal Values?	54
Pesantren and Their Affiliated [Women's] Organisations	55
Nahdlatul Ulama and Its Women's Wing Organisation	56
P3M and 'New' Islamic Organisations	60
3 Women and Pesantrens in Jombang: A Portrait from the Fieldwork	63
A Glimpse of Jombang District	63
Diwek Sub-district	65
Pesantren Tebuireng and Kiai Hasyim Asy'ary	69
Pesantrens for Girls in Jombang	73
Pesantren Seblak: Womens' Educational Leadership	75
Pesantren Seblak (1921-1988)	75
Pesantren Seblak (1988-2003)	78

4	Nyais of Jombang Pesantrens: Public Roles and Agency	87
	Biographical Sketch of the Nyais	87
	Nyai Khoiriyah	87
	Nyai Abidah (Bu Abidah)	95
	Nyai Mahshunah (Bu Sun)	100
	Theorising the Public Activities of the Nyais	103
	Between Public and Private Lives	107
	Supporting the Agency of Pesantren Women:
	Examining Kiai's Roles	108
	The Notion of Honour and Modesty	111
5	Santriwati's Life: Religious Femininity in Pesantren Education	115
	Girls and Pesantren Education	115
	The Pesantren : Moral Values and Differentiated Gender
	Treatment	118
	Kitab Kuning: On Gender Relations	121
	Uqûd al-Lujjajn in the Pesantren	123
	Santriwati and Their Personal Stories	128
	Nyai and Female Pupils of Pesantren : Power and Authority	132
	Conclusion	135
	Notes	137
	Bibliography	159
	Index	175

Acknowledgements

The main parts of this book derived from my doctoral thesis at the Institute for International Studies University of Technology, Sydney, based on my field research in Jombang, a district of East Java province, Indonesia in 2003 and 2004. In this regard, I would like to thank AusAid for the scholarship during my study in Sydney that also covered the financial support for the field research. I also would like to extend my thanks to the [acting] AusAid Liaison officers at UTS: Kaye Osborne, Steve Haddad and Susanne Clark, together with Raquel Docdoc and Eva Postlep who assisted AusAid students like me during our stay in Sydney. I would like to thank the Department of Religious Affairs for granting me permission to be on leave from my duties at The State Institute for Islamic Studies (IAIN) Ar-Raniry. Thanks to the Rector of IAIN Ar-Raniry, the Dean of the Faculty of Adab and Humanities at IAIN Ar-Raniry, and colleagues from IAIN Ar-Raniry for their support in one way or another.

I would like to express my heartiest gratitude to Dr. Barbara Leigh, my principal supervisor, for her intensive and passionate supervision during my study in Sydney, and more particularly for her invaluable efforts in reading my draft thesis and developing the ideas as well as the access she gave me to her personal library, along with proofreading this book. Dr Maja Mikula, my co-supervisor, has been someone who has always come up with interesting ideas in challenging the existing framework or underpinned theory. Both of them have provided me with very helpful comments and feedback in writing my doctoral thesis, which then transformed into this book.

In the fieldwork area, I am indebted to Lily Zakiyah Munir, Lies Marcoes-Natsir, Sinta Nuriyah A. Wahid, and Khofifah Indar Parawansa for the interviews, and their useful information, which brought me to this thesis topic. To the nyais: Nyai Mahshunah, Nyai Farida, Nyai Abidah, Nyai Nihayah and Nyai Adlan, Ibu Nurlaily Rahmah, and the family of Nyai Khoiriyah in general, Nyai Noer Chalida, Nyai Hasbiyah Hamid and Ibu Aina from Pesantren ar-Risalah Lirboyo, Nyai Ummu Salma from Pesantren Tambak Beras, my deep gratitude for their warm and open personalities in welcoming me to their pesantren world. My special thanks to Bapak Muhsin Zuhdy for the interview and wide collection of primary materials and his memory of Nyai Khoiriyah, which I relied upon and learnt so much in writing about the figure of Nyai Khoiriyah. My thanks also go to the family of Ibu Umi Indasah and Bapak Imran for their hospitality and invaluable assistance, to Mbak Rabiatal Adawiyah for the friendship and considerable assistance while I was in the field. To Kiai Yusuf Hasyim, Gus Riza, Bapak Mukhsin KS and Bapak Zainal from Pesantren Tebuireng, Bapak Zubaidy and Bapak Tamunnajat for their assistance. Special thanks also go to the female students of the pesantrens where I undertook my research in Jombang.

The earlier versions of chapters of this book have been published in Asia Pacific Journal of Education for its special issue on Muslim Education-Challenges, Opportunities and Beyond, Review of Indonesian and Malaysian Affairs, a book chapter of Indonesian Islam in New Era: How Women Negotiate their Muslim Identities edited by Susan Blackburn et al. I am indebted to all of the editors for their valuable comments, as I prepared those articles while writing my doctoral thesis. In particular to Susan Blackburn, Kathryn Robinson, Lyn Parker, Pieterella van Dorn-Harder, Virginia Hooker, Sha'eda Shah Buang, Bianca Smith, Siti Syamsiyatun who have read the earlier version of this book either as an initial draft of my doctoral thesis or as some articles/chapters derived from it, whose comments and feedback were also useful and helpful in shaping the argument of this book. I have also presented some parts of my thesis in various conferences and seminars, from which I also gained useful feedback from academic experts and colleagues to whom I am also very grateful. And to my colleagues Siti Syamsiyatun, Amelia Fauzia, Dina Afriyanti, Nina Nurmila, and Yuniyanti Chuzaifah for sharing discussions on related Muslim women's issues in Indonesia.

Moreover, my gratitude goes to IIS (Institute for International Studies) staff of University of Technology Sydney, and student colleagues for the discussion and feedback when I presented some parts of my doctoral research in the IIS regular discussion. My thanks to Pat Skinner for the editing work she did on my draft thesis, to Damien Spry for lay-out and translation. Thank you to Diah Ariani Arimbi, for sharing the resources and providing stimulating discussions on the topic of Muslim women. I would especially like to thank Arif and Yaya for their wonderful friendship in Sydney, particularly during the final stages of my study time in Sydney. And to those whom I cannot mention individually, thank you all for your contribution in one way or another.

The final manuscript of this book was finalised during my postdoctoral research at the International Institute for Asian Studies (IIAS) Leiden supported by Royal Netherlands Academy of Arts and Science (KNAW). Thanks to Dr. N.J.G. Kaptein from LIAS (Leiden University Institute for Area Studies) for his initial idea for the postdoctoral project and this book publication. Thanks you to Philippe Peycam, Manon Osseweijer, Sandra van der Horst for their kind support while I was in Leiden, Dr. Paul van der Velde and Martina van den Haak for assisting with helpful information on 'the thesis', associate Prof. Hajidah Bte Rahmat for some inspiring discussions on Indo-Malay culture, and Ms. Rosemary Robson for English editing assistance. While in Leiden, I also consulted the Leiden University Library and particularly KITLV library for additional data, thanks particularly to Rinie and Josephine from KITLV library. Inayatillah, Sehat Ihsan Shadiqin have also provided their assistance with the final editing format of this book, to whom I also would like to extend my gratitude.

My eternal thanks to my parents who are also among those who always gave me psychological support through their understanding and love, my late parents-in-law and my late grandmother who passed away when I was in Sydney. They are always there in my heart with their sincere support in my memory. My grateful thanks to my grandfather, my brother and my sister-in-law for the many kinds of encouragement and support they have provided. Last but not least, I would like to thank my beloved husband, Wardana, for his continuous encouragement and loving support during my study. Our little Nabila, who was born in Sydney during my study, always brought her own happiness throughout the tough study time.

Finally, I would also like to establish that any shortcoming and mistakes in this book are my own responsibility.

Glossary and Abbreviations

Aisyiyah	women's wing organization of Muhammadiyah
asrama	dormitory
aurat	the common definition of aurat , understood by the vast majority of Muslims, is to cover all of the body except the hands and the face; some ulamas say it also includes the feet
bahsul masail	a discussion on religious matters attended by kiai or ulama to produce a religious legal interpretation and a recommendation from the Islamic perspective on particular issues
bapak	Indonesian word for father
baraka	a bounty of grace
Dayah	traditional Islamic school in Aceh
Depag	Departemen Agama (Department of Religious Affairs)
Depdikbud	Departemen Pendidikan dan Kebudayaan (Department of Education and Culture)
Diknas	Departemen Pendidikan Nasional (Department of National Education)
DPR	Dewan Perwakilan Rakyat (National House of Representatives)
DPRD	Dewan Perwakilan Rakyat Daerah (Regional House of Representatives)
Fatayat NU	young women's section of Nahdlatul Ulama
Golkar	Golongan Karya (functional group [political party])
Gus	a title for the son or the male relatives of kiai
halaqah	learning circle of a group of students that resembles a class
ibu	Indonesian word for mother or married woman
IIQ	Institut Ilmu al-Quran (Institute for Advanced Quranic Studies)
Kiai	a [male] religious leader; a leader of a pesantren
kitab kuning	Islamic classical textbook
kota santri	the town of pesantren student
madrasah	Islamic school

mahram	the group of people who are unlawful for a woman to marry due to marital or blood relationships
masjid	mosque
MPD	Majelis Pendidikan Daerah (Regional Educational Board)
muballighah	female religious preacher
Muslimat NU NU	women's wing organization of Nahdlatul Ulama Nahdlatul Ulama (the biggest traditionalist Muslim organisation)
P3M	Perhimpunan Pengembangan Pesantren dan Masyarakat (The Centre for Pesantren and Community Development)
perempuan Pesantren	woman commonly known as Islamic boarding as well as 'traditional' Islamic educational institutions
Pesantren Putra	Pesantren for boys
Pesantren Putri	Pesantren for girls
PGA	Pendidikan Guru Agama (religious teacher training college)
PKB	Partai Kebangkitan Bangsa (National Awakening Party)
pondok	building or dormitory for student accommodation
PPP	Partai Persatuan Pembangunan (United Development Party)
priyayi	traditional Javanese middle class
purdah/burqa	the veil that also covers the face
putri	female, girl or daughter
RMI	Râbitha Ma'âhid al-Islamiyyah (The association of Islamic Pesantrens)
santri	pesantren [male] pupils
santriwati	pesantren female pupils
sekolah	school
Surau	Islamic traditional educational institution in West Sumatra
Tarawih	the evening prayers in fasting month/Ramadan
tariqa	sufistic group
TPQ	Taman Pendidikan Al-Quran (basic school for learning the Quran)
ulama	religious leader/scholar
Umi	a wife of [male] dayah leader or female religious leader
ustazahs	female teachers
yayasan	a foundation

Table of Figures

Figure 3.1	Map of Jombang	64
Figure 3.2	Map of pesantrens location in Diwek	66
Figure 3.3	The tree of Kiai Hasyim As'Ary's family	72
Figure 3.4	The tree of kinship in the leadership of Pesantren Seblak	79
Figure 3.5	Map of Pesantren Salafiah al-Machfudz	81
Figure 4.1	Categorisation of the nyai 's public roles	104
Figure 4.2	Layers of nyais ' activities	106

1 Introduction

Why Study Women and Pesantren?

Brief Background

In 2003 when I decided to focus my research on women and pesantren by examining the agency of the nyai (the kiai's wife or daughter) in a pesantren, the first question I encountered from one of my colleagues was 'Apa mereka memang berperan' (Do they have any role)? This question came as no surprise to me, as the majority of the best-known references and published works on pesantren in Indonesia barely lift the tip of the veil on the lives of women in pesantren. The main focus of pesantren research has almost always been on the role and leadership of kiai, either in the pesantren or in connection with their affiliation to such religious organisations as the Nahdlatul Ulama and the like. In his book, Pesantren, Sekolah and Madrasah, Karel Steenbrink states that "the wives of kiais never achieved significant roles".¹ Nevertheless, data from the 1930s reveal that a female leader of a pesantren in Jombang, Nyai Khoiriyah, was a learned ulama who was influential both in the pesantren leadership and the wider community. She and her [first] husband established a pesantren, and she was actively involved in its leadership. In Indonesia, the term nyai itself is also commonly known from literary works as the term used to designate the concubines or "housekeepers" of Dutch officers or ordinary Dutchmen in the history of colonial East Indies. Well-known examples are Nyai Dasima in the book by G.F. Francis or Nyai Ontosoroh in Bumi Manusia, a novel written by the famous Indonesian novelist Pramoedya Ananta Toer. In Java in general, beyond the colonial sphere, nyai was a term of respect for an older woman, and in some areas in Java, legends live on of a powerful woman/goddess/leader of the world of the invisible spirits, called Nyai Roro Kidul, who possessed enormous mystical powers. Nowadays, nyai also carries connotations of respect for a woman, particularly in a santri community, as it indicates that she is an immediate member of a kiai. Regardless of her educational and family background, once she is married to a kiai, she is a nyai in the eyes of her santri or local community.

Before discussing nyai and their roles as well as their agency in more depth, a brief explanation of what a pesantren is and how its values and traditions have affected the lives of women is called for. For the majority of Indonesian people, a pesantren is simply understood as a boarding school which carries on the tradition of teaching about Islamic heritage through textbooks known as kitab kuning, written in either Arabic or Malay or a local language in Arabic script.² The term santri is believed to be derived from an Indian word, 'sastri', meaning holy. Although the idea of an unbroken link is tempting, the connection between pesantren and early Hindu-Buddhist influence is being questioned as current research has suggested a more radical rupture between present-day pesantren and the earlier Hindu-Buddhist tradition. In his book Kitab Kuning, Pesantren dan Tarekat, Van Bruinessen has argued that the concept of pesantren is a local Indonesian tradition. Having said that in his work, he has also pointed out how the Middle East, particularly Mecca during the later nineteenth and early twentieth century, influenced the tradition of Islamic learning in the Archipelago, including pesantren.³ Unlike Mahmud Yunus, who believed that pesantren have been present ever since the penetration of Islam in the Archipelago,⁴ Van Bruinessen says that an institution today known as a pesantren was non-existent before the eighteenth century.⁵ In his chapter on the Politics and Cultures of Islamic Education in Southeast Asia, Hefner also indicates that the dissemination of the Islamic schooling process in the Archipelago began during the eighteenth century and that prior to that time Islamic learning was "not least of all of a sufistic and folk-ritualistic sort".⁶

An institution called pesantren is in fact far more than an educational institution, or school, where the pupil just comes, boards and learns, it is also a specific 'sub-culture'⁷ of the Indonesian Muslim community, more particularly the Javanese Muslim community. A pesantren has its own social hierarchy, 'culture', leadership structure, idiosyncratic rules and principles that might differ from those in the surrounding community, and these include matters related to women's lives. Informants in the field, and even some researchers on pesantren themselves, used to describe a pesantren as a 'little kingdom' because of its relative autonomy to 'organise' its own community. The social hierarchies in pesantrens in Java reveal the undeniable influence of the Javanese social structure, but modified by Islamic tradition. The kiai and his family form a 'higher' or 'upper' class among their pesantren fellows, some of whom might also come from families with a relatively high socio-economic status. In the case of the kiai and his family, this status is augmented by religious power and authority, a statement which applies equally to learned and active nyais.

Within a pesantren sub-culture, women are required to respect some specific norms and rules. What is commonly considered 'acceptable' for women outside pesantren might not be 'acceptable' for pesantren women. One example that springs to mind is that in most [traditional] pesantren, women are not allowed to wear trousers, which nowadays are daily wear for women in big towns and villages, particularly among the younger generation in Indonesia. Social interactions between men and women in a pesantren are also restricted. The spatial segregation between men and women is strictly upheld in the majority of pesantren, although the Indonesian Muslim community in general does not insist on this kind of segregation. Pesantren, seeking their legitimation in some references in kitab kuning, also teach a specific concept of 'gender' relations between men and women or husband and wives, a code which female pupils especially are expected to espouse, emphasising the devotion and loyalty expected of a woman. Although the general curriculum of education in Indonesia also contains allusions to this kind of ideal womanhood, the pesantren goes into far more detail about the principles involved, and this teaching is part of the religious instruction, and will effectively imbue it with a different meaning for the pupils. In view of these realities, pesantren women deserve to be studied as a separate group, as the main portrait of Muslim women in Indonesia will not represent their real life, leadership and agency adequately. Certainly, the context of their social lives, the barriers they face and the traditions ascribed to them socially and religiously as 'pesantren women' are relatively different from the lives of other women in the society. The borders of the public and private domain in their lives are also idiosyncratic. All this needs to be elaborated on specifically in order to acquire a better knowledge of their agency, and how they 'negotiate' their agency within the ascribed values and peculiar social context with which they are confronted as pesantren women.

In the study of pesantren, the five elements of Dhofier, or 'unsur-unsur pondok pesantren',⁸ namely kiai, pondok, mosque, santri (pesantren pupil) and the study of kitab kuning are almost without exception the main points of reference used by researchers as starting points to examine the pesantren institution. Literally, kiai is a title for an ulama.⁹ In Central and East Java, all ulama who own and manage a pesantren are addressed as kiai. A kiai has been described as a charismatic religious figure in traditional Muslim communities in Java. In this specific context, the term 'pondok' means the living accommodation for pupils, rather than the pesantren institution overall. As mentioned above, providing dormitories for pupils who board is a typical characteristic of a pesantren tradition. The pondoks usually have minimal but reasonable facilities,¹⁰ an introduction to the hard life the pupils might have to contend with in their future lives.¹¹ All pupils have to use similar facilities in the pondok, regardless of their family background or social status. This is to reduce the social gap between the disparate groups, and is among the values pesantrens have been proud to have introduced.¹² Since pesantrens insist on segregated education, the pondoks for male and female pupils are separate. The mosque is the place for the five daily communal prayers, the observance of which is also an inherent part of pesantren values. One of the main duties of a pesantren leader is to lead the communal prayers in the mosque, a responsibility he can also delegate to someone he trusts.¹³ For the female pupils, it is a nyai (kiai's wife) who leads the five communal prayers in a separate place, known as a musholla (small mosque/prayer house). The teaching of classical Islamic textbooks, the kitab kuning,¹⁴ is one of the principal educational activities in a [traditional] pesantren, although some pesantrens have adopted pelajaran umum (the general/secular sciences) into the curriculum. Santri is the term used to designate pesantren pupils, although in The Religion of Java, Geertz uses the term in a more general sense to describe a devout Muslim group.¹⁵

In 1926 the Nahdlatul Ulama (NU), a 'traditionalist' Muslim organisation, was founded in Surabaya.¹⁶ It was established to counter the encroachment of the modernising influence of 'modernist' organisations such as the Muhammadiyah¹⁷ on the local religious traditions of Muslim communities in rural Java. The leading figures in NU at the time were Kiai Hasyim Asy'ary, Kiai Wahab Chasbullah and Kiai Bisri Syansury.¹⁸ The group that established the NU organisation was a network of leading kiais or pesantren leaders.¹⁹ The establishment of NU was a significant starting point of the involvement of the pesantren and its community in the wider political affairs of the nation, including the nationalist movement. In 1946, NU established a women's organisation, whose members come from kiais' families or from a pesantren background.

In the Sukarno era, known as the Orde Lama (Old Order) period, Abdul Wahid Hasyim, son of the charismatic pesantren and NU leader Kiai Hasyim Asy'ary, was appointed the Minister of Religious Affairs.²⁰ Even before his appointment, Wahid Hasyim had already initiated a range of reforms in his pesantren of origin in Tebuireng.²¹ As minister, he continued his efforts by contributing to various attempts to reform the pesantren educational system. Among his initiatives was the establishment of training schools for female teachers, including the Sekolah Muallimat or Pendidikan Guru Agama (Training College for Female Religious Teachers). Some Sekolah Muallimat affiliated to the NU organisations, among them the Pendidikan Guru Agama NU Putri (NU Female Religious Teacher Training College) in Jombang, were also founded under his ministry. The establishment of female teacher training colleges was a response to the demand for female teachers in the educational institutions for girls established in the 1930s and 1940s.

Under the New Order regime during the presidency of Suharto, the pesantren concentrated on its role as an educational institution, as all political activities were kept under the strict control of the central government. As a consequence, compared to the previous period of the Sukarno era when NU was a major political party in Indonesia the pesantren and kiai were not overtly involved in the larger political deals in the country. The government assumed the responsibility for the social legislature in family court matters – previously the preserve of the kiai and pesantren. The government also established the Kantor Urusan Agama (Office of Religious Affairs) in rural areas to deal with marital issues, divorce, and inheritance – matters previously settled by pesantren leaders or local ulamas. Obviously, the role of the pesantren was substantially reduced because of the existence of this government agency to handle socio-religious matters. In spite of having their sails trimmed, pesantrens and pesantren leaders were still considered authoritative and thought to be able to influence the local people.²²

[Muslim] Women in Indonesia

A superficial analysis might give the impression that Muslim women have no power, as “the authority lies ultimately and by divine ordination in the hands of men”.²³ Haddad states that various anthropological accounts of Muslim societies describe Muslim women’s lives as backward, basing this argument on women’s subordination in the household.²⁴ This is a rather sweeping statement, and further research is certainly needed to understand the real complexities of Muslim women’s lives in specific historical and political contexts. For instance, to some extent the practice of segregation between the sexes in certain Muslim countries, most notably in the Middle East, has also been understood as an example of gender-based polarization. Some writers believe that the physical and symbolic segregation of the sexes automatically means that there is a separate space for men and women, and that women’s physical mobility is consequently limited to the household.²⁵

Criticism of the relevance of the dichotomy between the public and private in the study of divergent societies has also been put forward by scholars and anthropologists. Among them is Cynthia Nelson, who has written her assessment in a seminal essay on “Public and Private Politics: Women in the Middle Eastern World”, on the basis of her anthropological research in Egyptian society in particular and Middle Eastern society in general. She recommends rethinking notions of ‘power’ as an embodied quality institutionalised in types of social structures and recognizing it as a particular type of social relation instead, as reciprocity of influence. Instead of Middle Eastern men always assuming power over women, as earlier male-biased ethnographies seemed to imply, Nelson argues in favour of the concept of a ‘negotiated order’, an on-going dialectical process of social life in which both men and women are involved in a reciprocity of influence vis-à-vis each other. Drawing on ethnographic literature from throughout the Middle East, Nelson has shown that women can and do exercise a greater degree of power in various spheres of social life – for example, through the structural linking of kin and religious and supernatural control – than has previously been appreciated.²⁶ Nelson's call to study the domains of women's power in the Middle East has struck a resonant chord with feminist ethnographers. Since the mid-1970s, anthropologists and other ethnographically minded social scientists have documented the many ways in which women assume power in an otherwise patriarchal milieu, by influencing the lives and decision-making of significant others, including their menfolk. As noted by ethnographers, the household is probably the primary site of power for most Middle Eastern women,²⁷ but it is by no means the only site in which power and influence are exerted. The Iranian scholar Kandiyoti has promoted the notion of the 'patriarchal bargain' in "new areas of struggle and renegotiation of the relations between genders".²⁸ Writing in the same vein, Nayereh Tohidi has challenged the assumption that women are powerless and repressed. She has chosen instead to recognise the spirit of empowerment and resistance among Iranian women, arguing that women can "renegotiate gender roles and codes and [...] find a path of compromise and creative synthesis".²⁹

In the Indonesian context, this statement is particularly true of the wives (and sometimes daughters) of male pesantren leaders, who enjoy considerable power and prestige as religious figures in their own right.³⁰ Likewise, Evers Rosander has recorded female religious participation in a sufistic group in male-dominated society in Senegal. Focusing on several pious women in the group, she has argued that these women were "able to partly overcome their ideological, culturally constructed 'handicap' in religious life and in the society at large".³¹ The involvement of Muslim women in the public religious field has also been recorded by Coloun, in research into women's involvement in the Mouride tariqa in Senegal. Focusing on Sokhnas Magot Diop, who inherited the leadership of the tariqa from her father, Coloun has argued that she also inherited the power and influence conferred by barakah from him.³² Barakah is literally understood as the 'bounty of grace'. It connotes the power, wisdom and charisma of true leadership that connects her to her followers. Sokhnas had considerable political power in the region in which she lived, because of her disciples' loyalty and her many influential connections.³³ Fernea has recorded the activities of female religious leaders among Iranian women.³⁴ Commenting on such situations, Smith argues women not only "have a form of power in the domestic sphere", but, in their religious practices, they are also "able to exercise degrees of power that extend into the male domain".³⁵

I have also observed some kinds of power extension among pesantren women, which generate more space for them to enter the male domain, as will be described in the next following chapters.

Afsaruddin has used the term 'female public space' to underscore the notion the split between the public and the private or domestic but has failed to describe the complexity of women's lives in diverse circumstances.³⁶ Although this division might be used as a starting point from which to review women's socio-political and economic realities, it should be re-evaluated to reflect the changes in women's lives.³⁷ It is important to recognise that "Islam [...] is not monolithic in its impact on women's lives".³⁸ It would be truer to say that it exerts differential effects on women in different contexts, and shapes different patterns of female participation in the public sphere, including the public religious space, from which from Muslim women are usually disassociated, as religious leadership has been understood as a male-dominated space.

Many scholarly accounts of the lives of Indonesian women, past and present, confirm the fluidity of the public/private dichotomy in the practical lives of Indonesian Muslim women.³⁹ Smith has claimed that Indonesian women enjoy more freedom in the public sector than their female counterparts in Middle Eastern societies: "In Indonesia, [women are] generally more liberal than [in the] Islamic countries of the Middle East", and their "work is not isolated or separated from men's".⁴⁰ Indonesian women are habitually engaged in the productive sector and other income-generating employment. It is not unusual for Indonesian women involved in economic and productive activities to contribute to the income of their families.⁴¹ In his writings on Indonesian women, Daniel S. Lev, a well-known Indonesianist, remarks that the mainstream Islam in Indonesia does not confine women to their homes, nor does it "deny them substantial gains already made".⁴² As Blackburn argues, Islam in Indonesia hardly interferes in the public roles of women.⁴³ Indonesian religious leaders promote a view in which the possibility of women working has never been understood as contradictory to Islamic values. Quraish Shihab, a well-known Indonesian ulama and former Minister of Religious Affairs, has argued that "a woman has a right to work, as far as she needs the work, and as long as religious values and morality are preserved".⁴⁴ Another influential Indonesian ulama, Alie Yafie, has asserted that "if women have been able to become state presidents, the kind of trivial matter, like working outside the household to pursue a career, should be fine".⁴⁵ Indonesian women are also involved in a variety of organisations and movements. Income-generating work is considered acceptable and even desirable for women, as long as it does not interfere with their family duties.⁴⁶ Anthropological studies of various ethnic groups in the Indonesian Archipelago also generally suggest that women have played significant roles in traditional lives and economic production in different social contexts.⁴⁷ Jayawardena states that there is a common understanding in Acehese society that women engage in managing the household and participate in traditional local ceremonies, but this does not preclude the fact that Acehese agricultural communities in some regions can be polarised into a division in which women's work is 'mita breuh' (seeking rice, or contributing rice for family meals), while men's work is defined as 'mita peung' (seeking money to support the family through trading or other economic activities). Both mita breuh and mita peung carry strong connotations of economically productive work.⁴⁸ Accounts from other parts of Indonesia, whether traditionally matrilineal, as in West Sumatra or Java, concur in reporting that women are hardly ever excluded from public spaces or economic activities. Javanese society uses the term 'mbok bakul' for the lower-class women involved in traditional economic activities. Unquestionably, the diversity of gender relations and practices throughout the Archipelago was largely erased by the hegemonic discourse of gender relations promoted by the State. This occurred most notably under the New Order government, which promoted the relegation of women to the domestic sphere as part of the discourse of State development, despite the opposite reality of many women's lives.

Gender and Javanese Values

My discussion of Javanese ideals of gender relations is based on two major considerations. The first is that Javanese ideals of womanhood were an important source of influence on the gender policies of the Indonesian New Order regime, in which attempts were made to homogenise the diversity of gender-related values and practices in the Archipelago.⁴⁹ These policies have had a profound effect on Indonesian gender relations, and in many respects still continue to exist in the post-New Order period. The second consideration is related to the impact of traditional Javanese culture on the understanding of gender relations in pesantrens. The pesantren culture can be seen as a 'sub-culture'⁵⁰ of Javanese society. Pesantrens incorporate many values derived from Javanese tradition, including the understanding of power⁵¹ or barakah,⁵² but the factor of overriding importance in affecting the practice of gender relations in the pesantren context has been the Javanese concept of social hierarchy.

As Hull has asserted, "different economic classes generally imply very important differences in the position of women".⁵³ Traditional Javanese society has three main classes: ninggrat (the aristocracy), priyayi (the middle class) and wong cilik (the lower class). The ninggrat are the descendants of the Javanese kings, and the priyayi group consists primarily of the government bureaucracy, including the descendants of regional authorities and those who had access to the colonial schooling system. The wong cilik class is made up mostly of farmers, fishermen and small traders. Dzuhayatin has described how this categorization works in terms of gender practices:

Among the three layers of Javanese society discussed above, the priyayi or bureaucratic middle class had the greatest access to strategic positions in the period of national awakening prior to independence. Their greater access to Western education, in particular, enabled them to play a prominent role in political movements. The appointment of Sukarno to the presidency of the new nation in turn allowed the Javanese priyayi tradition to become the dominant culture of state, influencing everything from bureaucratic policies to family affairs. In this manner, the priyayi ideals of women as dedicated housewives became the ideal type for Indonesian women as a whole.⁵⁴

In her work on the performing arts, Hatley has sought to explain the Javanese ideals of womanhood. Although the traditional ideals derive from the gendered practices of the Javanese royal courts (kraton), undoubtedly the modern ideals are influenced by the Western-style education, to which women from the privileged classes have had access. A new stream of ideological influence has entered Indonesian society in recent years – associated with current notions of modernity, progress, and globalisation.⁵⁵ In the past, many of the members of early women's organisations were from the priyayi class, those with the opportunity to have a formal education.⁵⁶

Studies of Javanese women commonly advance one or the other of two mutually contradictory arguments. The first argument is that Javanese women, especially those belonging to the lower social classes, have achieved a significant social status in the family, as they have participated in income-generating activities.⁵⁷ The second argument is that Javanese women are subordinated in the Javanese hierarchical system, as they accrue no power or prestige from their economic activities outside the household.⁵⁸

Even though the tenor of their argument is that the public/private dichotomy is essentially contingent, most studies of Javanese women point out that Javanese ideals associate women with domestic lives and a lack of power and prestige. After her discussion of the fluidity of the public/private division in Javanese social life, concludes that Javanese ideals see women as “neither equal nor dominant”.⁵⁹ These ideals are assumed to have been derived from the traditional understanding of womanhood prevalent at Javanese royal courts.⁶⁰ Hence, even when the flexibility of the public/private division in Javanese women's lives is acknowledged, Javanese women are seen as inferior, although they might have achieved a high-ranking position.⁶¹ The traditional notions of womanhood cultivated at the royal courts are seen as constituting a cultural ideal in Java: "Women are ascribed characteristics judged as essentially inferior to those of men and are thus assigned subordinate status".⁶²

The anthropological work on the Javanese has also confirmed the training of young Javanese girls for domestic life, as a preparation for marriage. In her study of kinship in an area in Central Java, Geertz records that girls were given serious responsibilities around the home from very early adolescence.⁶³ Sullivan notices that some scholars disregard the division of labour as a means to sustain a power monopoly. In the minds of these scholars, the segregation of labour is a way to organize society ordained by 'nature'. In the opposite court are those scholars who focus on Javanese women's engagement in the public realm and are in no doubt that women have access to participation in the public sphere outside the household.⁶⁴ The trading sector in villages in Java is largely dominated by women, a statement just as true of lower-class as it is of middle-class people. Privileged middle-class women who have had access to education can also hold positions in the schooling system, civil service and other public institutions.⁶⁵ It would appear that placing an emphasis on domestic life in community as in Java does not necessarily result in the exclusion of women from the public realm.

In any attempt to understand the intersections of class and gender, an examination of the understanding of power in Javanese society is essential. Anderson has argued that the Javanese concept of power differs from the Western model. He adduces four main differences between the Western concept of power and its Javanese counterpart. In the Western tradition, power is abstract and morally ambiguous, its sources are heterogeneous and its accumulation has no inherent limits. In contrast, in Javanese culture power is concrete and homogeneous, it does not raise the question of legitimacy, and the amount of power in the universe is constant.⁶⁶ Anderson's study has been criticized by Nieuwenhuis,⁶⁷ who castigates its neglect of the forms of power available to Javanese women. Priyayi values can be traced back to the "marriage of Javanese aristocratic values with nineteenth century codes of proper conduct of indigenous servants of the colonial Javanese tradition".⁶⁸ The broader influence of priyayi values in Javanese society has often been noted. This elite influence did not stop with the end of colonial rule, but has continued into the present period through a process that has been referred to as priyayization, whereby priyayi norms and values are adopted by other elements of the population. In the process of priyayization, class status gives the elite woman access to power in the Western sense.⁶⁹

The status of Javanese women tends to be tied to that of their husbands, “since all individuals in Java must be ranked differentially relative to each other, husbands and wives are so ranked, and husbands enjoy higher status than their wives”.⁷⁰ Yet this also means that women are permitted a range of styles for being ‘inferior’, and this accounts for the somewhat “paradoxical nature of women’s position in Javanese society”.⁷¹ A woman’s control over the household and her agricultural or trading activities outside the home do not provide her with a standing in the community, as this is “determined by the occupation and personal reputation of her husband, or in his absence, a grown son, who represents her as head of the household at public gatherings and ritual occasions. A woman is dependent on a man for full social representation”.⁷²

The processes of priyayization and ibuism, in which a woman derives power from her husband’s status, also occurs in Javanese religious communities, including santri groups. Naturally, it also affects the position of women married to religious leaders. A kiai’s wife, the nyai, is respected both in the pesantren community and in society as a whole,⁷³ regardless of her understanding of or intellectual capacity in the Islamic sciences. Undeniably, some nyais are also able to combine this legitimacy based on kinship, which gives them ascribed power, with their own agency based on their personal talents and skills.

Why Women and Pesantren?

Publications written in English about Indonesian women are still few and far between compared to those about the other Muslim world of the Middle East⁷⁴ or the Indian Subcontinent.⁷⁵ In the three volumes of Women and Islam: Critical Concepts in Sociology edited by Haideh Moghissi,⁷⁶ there was not a single article on Muslim women in Indonesia. Likewise, with very few exceptions, volumes on women in Indonesia have no chapters on Islam.⁷⁷ My point is that the social life of women with a pesantren background is not socially identical to the life of Indonesian [Muslim] women generally, considering that the micro-social world of the pesantren underpins specific cultures and principles related to women and women’s issues. Koentjaraningrat,⁷⁸ an anthropologist who devoted his major work to Java, did understand that the social stratification of the Javanese santri community needed to be studied in greater depth as it differed from the social stratification of Javanese society in general. What makes an institution like a pesantren pivotal in a study devoted to the lives of Muslim women? Most importantly, it is a core of Islamic values reproduction, including notions related to women and gender issues in general. Pesantrens and their leaders also connect the community to some contextual issues in the nation. During fieldwork, I certainly came across some pesantrens that hosted a workshop on counter-terrorism or organised discussions about women trafficking or domestic violence. Hardly less important is the fact that linked by their widespread, extensive networks, pesantren share deeply held values of Islamic traditions maintained from one generation to another.

A number of works have been devoted to the study of pesantrens and other traditional Islamic educational institutions in Indonesia. These works have examined their traditions, leadership, intellectual transmission, their organisation by the Nahdlatul Ulama and other related topics. Having read these numerous pieces of research and studied published works on pesantren, I feel it does indeed seem plausible to conclude that women have attracted less attention. In all the studies on pesantrens, kiais are almost always the core subject. Until 2002, the time I conducted fieldwork on women and pesantren, there had been very few academic works either in English or Indonesian that specifically dealt with the topic of women and pesantren, particularly any to do with the leadership and the agency of pesantren women.⁷⁹ Anyone reading pesantren history and its development in Indonesia must immediately be struck by the absence of women as ‘actors’,⁸⁰ not only as leading pesantren personalities and teachers but also as pupils. This is not only true of the study on the earlier history of pesantrens; the same can be said of the late-twentieth and early-twenty-first century research on pesantren.⁸¹ The absent portrayal of female actors can be linked to the patriarchal nature of pesantren leadership⁸² so clearly spelled out in different studies on pesantren; for instance, male descendants of a kiai rather than the kiai’s female family will be prioritised in deciding the succession to a pesantren leadership. This disparity is also found in other such traditional educational institutions in different parts of Indonesia, such as Aceh. Even in the general study of Islamic education in the Muslim world, the existence of women, particularly in traditional educational settings, is still generally ‘missing’.⁸³

It was in the juxtaposition of such a strongly patriarchal tradition and the dynamic generated by the current social changes in Indonesia that the idea of examining the life and agency of women in an Islamic educational institution took root. This book will focus specifically on pesantren women in Java. Compared to other Islamic traditional educational institutions in the other parts of Indonesia, Java has a strong pesantren tradition, extensive networks⁸⁴ and, more particularly, this tradition is closely related to one of the biggest Muslim [traditionalist] organisations, the Nahdlatul Ulama. Interestingly, although the pesantrens show no signs of flagging, some other similar types of institution like the surau in Minangkabau seem to be in a decline as a consequence of the boom in the modern schooling system in West Sumatra.

What I mean by pesantren women in this study are those women who are engaged in the educational setting of a pesantren institution; either as leaders, teachers or pupils, more particularly those who live in a pesantren compound, so that the pesantren rules or traditions also affect them in more intensive ways. My chief aim will be to examine their engagement in pesantren education throughout the history of the institution, and to observe the sociological aspects of those women's lives, agency, leadership and political roles. In writing this book, my main argument is that despite some obvious patriarchal traditions attached to the pesantren or similar institutions, or the elements of what has been called misogyny inherent in the textbooks of curriculum taught in the pesantren, various pesantren women have refused to be daunted and have explored their potential and transformed this into an agency whose effect is felt not just in their pesantren but also their community. Some chapters of this book will elaborate on some outstanding figures among the pesantren women who fit this description. In this study, I examine in detail the female figures or leaders of pesantrens in Java who are addressed as nyai. As a nyai, a woman assumes the top place in the hierarchy among the other women in the pesantren. This kind of hierarchy is clearly an adaptation of the Javanese social class system, and to some extent it is also a marriage between Javanese feudalism and Islamic values.

Generally speaking, several categories of women are found in a pesantren milieu. The first category consists of nyais, who are the closest female family members of a kiai.⁸⁵ Some pesantrens also have the category of badal nyai, which is a kind of junior nyai. Ustazah are the non-nyai female teachers. Their task is to instruct the group of female pupils, the santriwatis (female pupils) in the pesantren. The same layers, although with some slight variations, can also be found in the similar traditional educational institutions like the dayah in Aceh. It is my intention to concentrate the discussion on nyai as the closest relative to kiais, either their wives or daughters,⁸⁶ but I shall also study the other groups of women insofar as they relate to, interact and identify with the nyais.

Literally, nyai means a married woman.⁸⁷ In her study about mubalighah (women preachers) in Jakarta and West Java, Marcoes divides them into two categories: ustazah and nyai. In her description, nyai designates the status a woman derives from her father or husband. When a woman marries a kiai, she will automatically become a nyai, regardless of her family background and education. In many aspects, a nyai is imbued with a particular 'power' and hence is legitimated to undertake certain tasks and duties because of her affiliation with a kiai's family.

Her social position contains elements borrowed from the concepts of priyayization and ibuism.⁸⁸ In his discussion of this subject, Nieuwenhuis explained the concept of ibuism as a situation in which a woman takes care of family members, group members, members of a certain social strata, a firm/company or a country, without expecting a certain degree of power and prestige as a reward: "Women who are looking after a family, a group, a class, a company or the state without demanding power or prestige in return".⁸⁹ A nyai can also be seen as a 'mother' for all the pupils. In many cases, a nyai certainly wields 'unofficial power' which allows her to act on behalf of the pesantren leadership, especially in matters pertaining to female pupils. Regardless of whether her name is officially registered in the pesantren management structure, a nyai is a 'women leader' in a pesantren. This position is imbued with important meaning and is an entry point for the exercise of a wider agency for a nyai with adequate qualifications. In my research, I have defined their situation as 'santri ibuism', which will be covered in great detail in the second chapter.

Endogamous marriage is common in pesantrens as it is considered one of the ways to preserve the 'blue blood' of a kiai's family. When the marriage between the children of two kiai is solemnized, the relationship between the two pesantrens is also reconfirmed, and this opens a possibility for good networking between many different pesantrens. A santri ibuism role has two sides: on the one hand, a nyai will gain respect and derivative power from her male family members' position; on the other hand, a nyai also takes responsibility for her role as 'symbolic mother'⁹⁰ for the female pupils in the pesantren. Even though their status initially derives from their male counterparts, either through marriage or a consanguineal relationship, some nyais also develop their own potential and take initiatives that contribute to their meaningful agency.

When a woman becomes a nyai, either by inheritance or by marriage, the status comes with duties and expectations from both the pesantren and the community. If a nyai is capable and willing to work hard, she can fill an important position in the pesantren and community leadership. A nyai who is competent in Islamic studies will be an instructor for female pupils. Some also assume the role of instructor or speaker in certain forums. Some nyais are actively involved and have important positions on the board of Muslimat or Fatayat NU or other civil society organisations. They are also involved in politics, a tendency which emerged very visibly in the Reformation era, when religious organisations like NU and the Muhammadiyah began to affiliate with politics. A number of nyais also have the chance to manage or lead the women in a *pesantren*⁹¹ or, in a rare case, a nyai can even become the leader of both men and women in the pesantren. The role a nyai assumes is varied. When a kiai dies, a nyai can replace him, although commonly nyais will restrict their activities to pesantren for girls. If the leadership role is taken over by her son, a nyai will become a respected 'person to be consulted' and will have symbolic authority as a nyai sepuh (senior nyai), sometimes addressed as mbah nyai (mbah means grandfather/mother). Nowadays, the current generation of nyais has enjoyed a good formal education.

Some nyais whom I observed and interviewed during my fieldwork in 2003, among them Nyai Abidah, Nyai Mahshunah, Nyai Ummu Salma from Jombang, Nyai Lily Nurkholida from Kediri, and Nyai Hasbiyah Hamid from Malang, are female figures from pesantrens who exercise a variety of models of leadership and agency. Nyai Abidah was the leader of Pesantren Salafiyah Seblak which had male and female pupils. Nyai Mahshunah and her in-laws are the leaders of Pesantren Putri Salafiyah Syafiiyah Seblak in a collective leadership system. Nyai Ummu Salma and her husband, Kiai Nasir Abd Fattah, led the largest women's pesantren, the Pesantren Tambak Beras compound. Like Nyai Abidah, Nyai Lily Nurkholida leads one of the sub-pesantren inherited from her parents in Purwoasri Kediri. When her husband passed away, Nyai Lily took over the running of the pesantren which also has male pupils. Meanwhile, when I carried out my research, Nyai Hasbiyah Hamid, who was also a member of Pesantren Tambak Beras family, was the leader of Pesantren al-Islahiyah in Malang. In her leadership duties, Nyai Hasbiyah was supported by her daughter, who at that time was managing a WCC (Women Crisis Centre) built on the pesantren campus, whose use was not restricted to the pesantren but intended for the local community as a whole.

Concerning their heritage, they are all from the immediate family of kyais. Without exception, they are daughters of a kiai and also married a kiai. Their personal circumstances strengthened their position as nyai in their pesantrens. During my research in a number of pesantren in East Java, I never met any pesantren female figure who had won broader recognition in the community and was also the leader of a pesantren, who was not part of a kiai family. The most plausible explanation for this state of affairs is that most of today's pesantrens are inherited and/or have been developed from pesantrens inherited from the kiai's parents or members of their extended family. Only those who are blood relatives can play an important part and have capital in the pesantren.

As mentioned earlier, the published sources on the topic of women and pesantren tend to focus strongly on the gender bias in the kitab kuning.⁹² Little attention has been paid to how such a dynamic, evolving process of gender relations actually takes place on a day-to-day basis in the traditional religious context of the pesantren. Just as Indonesian women in general have to contend with the ambiguity of the division of labour of public and private spheres,⁹³ so too do pesantren women. In this unique context and tradition, the dynamic process of gender relations in a pesantren setting intersects with a range of aspects and is not confined to class and gender hierarchies, as it applies generally to the Indonesian women's lives, but is nevertheless heavily influenced by the religious values and the hierarchical concepts prevalent in Javanese society. Interestingly, this process takes place within an educational institution in which the social values of pesantren are conveyed to the younger generation of pesantren [female] pupils.

Over the course of the twentieth and early twenty-first century, the involvement of leading women has not been restricted to one or two particular pesantrens, but has been spread over a number of pesantrens for young girls. This raises the question of why have figures like these nyais been largely undetected or remain largely ignored in writings on pesantren? Two obvious explanations immediately present themselves as an answer to the question. The most conspicuous is because pesantren education requires segregation between male and female groups, therefore social interactions between the two sexes are also limited. Given this situation, not all ethnographers would have had easy access to women-centred social life, particularly if the ethnographer was male. Therefore, in their case, perhaps the perspectives they utilized were concentrated on the visible public sphere, in which men assumed official power, and this automatically led to the marginalisation of the women's informal sphere: the world of unofficial, private politics.⁹⁴ In his book on Tradisi Pesantren (Pesantren Tradition) based on his research over the course of 1977-1978, Dhofier explicitly mentioned the limitations with which he was faced when he wanted to gain access to the world of women's pesantren. This has not changed much as recently a PhD pupil who is conducting an on-going study of pesantren women in West Java also confirmed the restrictions with which he had to contend while making observations and doing interviews with pesantren women. The second explanation for the lack of writing on women in pesantren is that in a patriarchal society, especially when this is combined with the patriarchal nature of the structural leadership of the pesantren and the concepts with which pesantren education is infused through such instruments as kitab kuning,⁹⁵ women's roles have been assumed to be associated with the private domain, and this is also extrapolated to the lives of pesantren women.

Women's Issues in Education

Pesantrens have also been the subject of criticism on account of the gender bias in the textbooks known as kitab kuning,⁹⁶ one prime example of which is the 'Uqûd al-Lujjayn.⁹⁷ Some concern has also been raised by the patriarchal elements in the values implanted in a pesantren through its curriculum. These are subsequently combined with the patriarchal perspectives which the instructors entertain, and inevitably the colour their explanation of the texts throughout the teaching-learning process. Several organisations working on gender and Islam at the national level, such as Puan Amal Hayati, Rahima and formerly P3M in its fiqhunnisa' division, have set up several empowerment programmes, initially through a women's reproductive rights programme. In this context it is impossible to overlook a Nahdlatul Ulama organisation like Fatayat NU that also concentrates on women's empowerment or gender programmes. By dint of their efforts, various women from pesantren have been encouraged to become involved in more public activities beyond the confines of their pesantren.

Although considerable attention has been paid to the development of the schooling system and women's access to education, the same cannot be said about the discursive construction of gender in the educational system.⁹⁸ It appears that although ideas about gender roles might not always prove a stumbling block to educational opportunities for women in Indonesia generally, they do affect the content of education.⁹⁹ In the colonial period, the Dutch introduced a certain rigidity into the representations of gender in colonial society. Certainly, they promoted the view that men's primary role was to engage in productive activities in the public domain, while women were assigned to domestic roles, raising children and providing comfort for their husbands at home. The recruitment of native people into the bureaucracy by the Dutch colonial government provided a model in which men's careers were privileged over women's work. It was beneficial to the government to free men from household responsibilities, which might hamper their productivity in public affairs. With the help of Christian missionaries, the colonial regime provided schools in which young mothers and girls were prepared to play their future role as housewives.¹⁰⁰ This gender-based division of labour reinforced a legacy that is still present in contemporary Indonesian society. Some current textbooks used in Indonesian schools still promote a division between the public and the private, directing women towards domestic chores and men towards being family patriarchs and breadwinners.¹⁰¹ Their purpose is to promote the concept of familism adopted by the State.¹⁰² Muthaliin's research on gender bias in Javanese primary schools demonstrates that it rears its head in different aspects of the educational process as well as in the social system of the school itself.¹⁰³

Another significant aspect which should be mentioned here in the context of Islamic education in Indonesia, particularly pesantren, is the segregation encouraged between men and women, although not on the scale of that found in the Middle East or some other Muslim countries like Pakistan. The institution of purdah is unknown in the Indonesian Muslim community, most Muslim women make a personal choice to wear a headscarf and clothing that decks all parts of the body except the face and hands. To some extent, 'religious reasons' are brought into play to limit women's access to public education because it takes women out of their private world in order to mix with their male counterparts, something which is frowned upon by some Muslim groups.¹⁰⁴ In spite of these inherent hurdles, in Indonesia women's attendance at Islamic schools or other educational institutions is quite high, even in communities known for their religious devotion like those in Aceh and Padang.¹⁰⁵ Undoubtedly, some circles have also shown considerable resistance to female education, particularly in the early twentieth century when the schools or educational institutions which accommodated women were few in number. One case in point is an early pesantren for girls in Java, Pesantren Denanyar. As time passed, women's access to education has expanded significantly, the statistics suggest that female attendance at schools across Indonesia, including the religious schools like pesantren or madrasah, is relatively high.

However, in terms of the content of the teaching or values transferred through education, the schools or educational institutions have tended to embrace the notion of 'public men-private women'. Undeniably, the Muhammadiyah's Sekolah Muallimat, founded in 1917, actively promoted and taught specific female skills required for a well-run domestic life, in which it did not deviate greatly from many Western schools established for women at that time. A particularly strict division between the public and the private can perhaps be detected in the curricula of a pesantren. The textbooks used in the pesantren, particularly those from the pre-twentieth-century era, were in Arabic, or at least written in Arabic script.¹⁰⁶ The majority of them were written by Middle Eastern ulama, and they reflect the socio-historical context of their origins.¹⁰⁷ Some of these textbooks have been criticised for their gender bias.¹⁰⁸

Brief Description of the Research

My involvement with pesantren women in Indonesia is part and parcel of my interest in looking at Islamic education in Indonesian society and women's issues in Muslim communities. In the course of my doctoral research, my focus has changed from the idea of looking at pesantrens in different regions or sub-districts in the province of East Java to a specific focus on the Jombang area. The background to this 'shifting' of perspective was information I gathered on the late Nyai Khoiriyah of Pesantren Seblak. My principal informant was her grand-daughter, Lily Zakiyah Munir. Lily recounted the history of Pesantren Seblak, and in doing so stressed the fact that the pesantren has had some dominant female figures in its leadership history. She also mentioned the religious competence of her grandmother (Nyai Khoiriyah). The fact that Nyai Khoiriyah had remained in Mecca, the centre of Islamic learning, for almost 20 years would significantly endorse the perception that she was equipped with the highest religious authority in the Islamic sciences. The next person to mention the 'keulamaan' (ulamatisation – the making of a religious leader) of Nyai Khoiriyah was Sinta Nuriyah A. Wahid, the director of the non-government organisation, PUAN Amal Hayati,¹⁰⁹ who was educated in the pesantren for girls al-Fatimiyah Tambak Beras. She is also married to the celebrated kiai, Abdurrahman Wahid – who as a former President is among the most prominent figures in pesantren and the NU community. From their descriptions, I concluded that Nyai Khoiriyah was a female religious figure who exerted enormous influence in her public (religious) position within the constraints of the pesantren tradition. Their stories of Nyai Khoiriyah inspired me to visit the pesantren, which is located in an area of Jombang. In the fieldwork area, I began to grow even more aware that it was not only Nyai Khoiriyah who represented active pesantren female figures. Other nyais from her pesantren and beyond also exerted considerable public influence by holding important positions in pesantren affairs and beyond. With the common belief in pesantren patriarchal values in the leadership and the material in the kitab kuning,¹¹⁰ the existence of a pesantren female figure such as she is very interesting in terms of enriching the history of pesantren education in Indonesia with the untold stories of some significant nyais.

As a woman myself, gaining access to the pesantrens for girls and the female figures in a pesantren was not very difficult. My previous educational background and my literacy in Arabic also assisted me in the engagement with the Islamic educational system of pesantren. This research began in early 2003, when I commenced conducting interviews and making some visits to various nyais and some pesantrens for girls, mainly in East Java, in January and February 2003. Another part of my research was conducted from the middle of 2003 until the end of the year. Some interviews with key informants were conducted in Jakarta, and in them I sought more information about Lily Zakiyah Munir, Sinta Nuriyah A. Wahid, and Lies Marcoes. Most of the interviews with the nyais, both formal and informal, were conducted in their pesantren. A small part of research to collect additional data and information was undertaken in February 2005.

Thanks to the far-flung, extensive network of a pesantren, particularly as a consequence of the endogamous marriage between the kiai families,¹¹¹ the opportunity to engage with various pesantrens, even in different areas, is always possible. I remember that once I was with a nyai from Pesantren Salafiyah Syafiyah Seblak, when she invited us to visit Pesantren Darul Ulum, her pesantren of origin. On another occasion, I was with a nyai from Pesantren Paculgowang, observing her activities and her social interaction with her female pupils, and she then invited me to accompany her to Pesantren Lirboyo for the graduation ceremony. She has a close familial relationship with Pesantren Lirboyo as her mother is its kiai, and her brother, the present leader of the pesantren, is married to the daughter of Kiai Idris Marzuki, the kiai of Pesantren Lirboyo. As will be explored in more depth in this book, kinship relationships have played a crucial role in pesantrens and in the circumstances of the nyais I studied. High status and the capacity to assume the responsibility attached to her position were not necessarily sufficient to permit a woman a high level of engagement with the pesantren and the community. It is that transcendent, enhanced capacity for action that sets these particular women apart.

While focusing on the female leaders or nyai in Java, I also had the opportunity to engage in the life of female pesantren pupils, participating in their classes, sholat jama'ah (communal prayers), chatting or staying with them in their boarding houses (asrama) All of this reminded me of my earlier experiences in Aceh, where I lodged in just such an educational institution. After finishing primary school, I spent three years living in an asrama with female counterparts, while I studied Islamic sciences at Islamic secondary schools, a close but not necessarily exactly similar experience. From my engagement with the female pupils, I also learned to observe how much power and authority a nyai can exercise over them. The main parts of the book are derived from the fieldwork in Java as part of my doctoral research. In Java, most data were collected in eastern areas such as Jombang, Malang and Kediri, but the main focus was Jombang, which is known among the Indonesian community as 'kota santri', the town of pesantren pupils.

Book Chapters

The book is divided into five chapters. Chapter One, the Introduction, contains a brief description of the Islamic educational institution called a pesantren and its place in Indonesian Muslim society. In it, I elaborate on the reason behind the idea of studying women and pesantren in Indonesia, particularly in Java. Chapter Two is devoted to women and pesantren education and the pesantren tradition in general. It begins with a historical spotlight on women and their education in Indonesia focussing on women and pesantren education. It sheds light on the women actors in the pesantren world, particularly those female religious leaders who are well-known nyai in the Javanese community, by analysing the concept of ibuism, which I have designated santri ibuism to describe the status of nyais from pesantren background. This chapter also contains a brief examination of the discourse on women or gender in general taught in the textbooks of pesantren, the well-known kitab kuning. This information is combined with the dynamics of Islamic organisations affiliated to the world of pesantren women like the Muslimat NU or the Fatayat NU. Chapter Three is a description derived from my fieldwork. The main fieldwork area of the study was Jombang in the province of East Java and the surrounding area. Jombang was chosen because of its reputation as the 'kota santri' (the town of pesantren pupils) in the Indonesian Muslim community. It is an area with a high concentration of well-known pesantrens. This chapter also contains a description of the figure of Kiai Hasyim Asy'ary from Pesantren Tebuireng, which was the centre of pesantren in his own day, since many if not all of the pesantrens leaders in the area, including the nyais studied in this book, have some connection to Pesantren Tebuireng and to the figure of Kiai Hasyim Asy'ary. Chapter Four examines the lives of outstanding women from Pesantren Seblak, the principal case studies. The women were selected to represent three generations of pesantren leadership, beginning from the founder of the pesantren down to the third generation contemporary with this research. This offers a sample of how women in the pesantren world exercise agencies over history. Their life-histories are analysed from the perspective of how they have negotiated their public roles, leadership and agency within the compass of some pesantren traditions. Chapter Five is dedicated to examining the lives of female pupils in pesantren compounds as a complement to the previous chapters that focused on the female leaders of pesantren. This part elaborates on the models and principles of pesantren education for women that differ from the general schooling system. The dynamics among those teenagers who spent their lives in pesantren will also be uncovered through the personal stories of some selected pupils. The last part of this chapter looks at their relationship with other women actors, particularly nyais, as pesantren usually adopt the familism system in which the nyais of their female figures are a sort of figurative/surrogate mother, or some of them become the role models for female pesantren pupils.

2 Women and Pesantren Education

History, Kinship, and Contents

Women and Education in Indonesia

At the beginning of the twentieth century, women's movements began to spread among both nationalist and religious organisations.¹ Around the same time, as a consequence of the Dutch Ethical Policy, schools for girls were introduced, particularly in Java.² Although opportunities for women in the Indonesian Archipelago to participate in a modern schooling system date back to the end of the nineteenth century, they increased significantly in the first quarter of the twentieth century. This coincided with the time the Dutch colonial government introduced what was known as the Ethical Policy. Some enlightened people in the Netherlands felt compelled to repay the 'debt of honour' to the East Indies by improving the living conditions of the local people and providing education for the natives. The most significant part of the project was the establishment of schools for native Indonesians³ and the admission of boys and girls from aristocratic families to Dutch Western-style schools. As a result of the Ethical Policy, a new class of educated people emerged, including women, who were later to spearhead the struggle for national liberation and the betterment of the lot of the native people. Among them were the founders of various other types of schools for natives in different places in Indonesia.

In 1904, Dewi Sartika from West Java, who devoted her life to the advancement of women's education, established a school for women in Bandung. Her school was a major success and prompted the colonial government to establish various other schools for girls in different areas, among them Tasikmalaya in 1913 and Sumedang in 1916, nearly all of them in Java. During this same period, the educational institutions that had previously catered only for male students began to accept some female pupils. After the opening of the Law Faculty in Batavia in 1924, a few Javanese and ethnic Chinese women enrolled almost immediately.⁴ Among the most significant schools in this period was the Taman Siswa,⁵ established in Yogyakarta in 1922 by a leading Indonesian educationalist, Ki Hajar Dewantara. This school was the first important educational organisation run by Indonesia's nationalists,⁶ and it did admit some female pupils. Ki Hajar Dewantara's wife was quite active in campaigning for female education.⁷

In the spirit of the times, the idea of providing better education for Muslim women in Java was embraced by Islamic organisations such as the Muhammadiyah and NU. Kiai Haji Ahmad Dahlan, the founding father of the Muhammadiyah, taught a few female pupils alongside his male students. Aisyiyah, the women's organisation of the Muhammadiyah, considered the provision of better education for Muslim women one of its priorities. Hence, Aisyiyah and other organisations like it established educational institutions for girls, including midwifery and teacher-training colleges. In 1919, Nyai Nurkhadijah and her husband, Kiai Bisry Syansury, began to organise a small informal learning group for girls in the compound of their Pesantren Denanyar in Jombang. These girls were recruited from among her close relatives and families in the neighbourhood. After this informal halaqah attracted the attention of the local community and won its approval, the pesantren putri (pesantren for girls) was formally established in 1930 in the pesantren compound.⁸

In West Sumatra, Rahmah al-Yunusiyyah founded an Islamic school for women, the Diniyah Putri, in 1923. Rahmah came from a religious family, and her brother, Zainuddin Labay el-Yunusiyy, was also a celebrated figure in the history of Islamic educational reform in West Sumatra. He was the founder of the Sumatra Tawalib school.⁹ As a consequence of her considerable efforts to promote education for women, Rahmah is sometimes compared to the figure of Kartini in Java, now a national heroine, famous for her struggle for women's emancipation.¹⁰ For its time, the Diniyah Putri school was a modern institution, and included both Islamic and secular sciences in its curriculum. Abdullah shows no hesitation in declaring that Rahmah's efforts in establishing the Diniyah Putri marked a milestone in the history of the women's movement in Indonesia. Rahmah founded her school just when the idea of female education was beginning to take shape, amid the tension generated between Islamic notions of gender and local traditions.¹¹ She believed that a woman should be able to become a president, minister or writer, or engage in any other profession that suited her capabilities.¹² Because of her efforts and commitment to promoting female education, she was awarded the title of 'syaikha'¹³ by one of the most famous universities in the Muslim world, al-Azhar in Egypt, in 1975.¹⁴ Rasuna Said, another prominent female figure from West Sumatra, was a friend of Rahmah's. She was also involved in the campaign for female education. She taught at Diniyah Putri in the 1930s and was later active as a religious teacher for girls in the Minangkabau region. Because of her severe, uninhibited criticism of Dutch policies, in 1933 she was sentenced to jail in Semarang for nine months by the Dutch colonial government.¹⁵ Later, Rasuna Said established another school for girls in North Sumatra.¹⁶

During the 1950s and 1960s, women began to go to school in increasing numbers. They entered various professions and were politically active in- and outside the party system. Despite having to fight every step of the way for influence, they enlisted in the bureaucracy at all levels, established their own organisations, campaigned for change and did not hesitate to take sides publicly on major social and political issues. Educational policies, provisions and infrastructure of the new Indonesian State had to be created in the post-Independence period. This is when the Ministry of Education and the Ministry of Religious Affairs, which coordinate both the secular and religious education systems, were established.¹⁷ Under the New Order regime, the strategy of educational development was counted among the most crucial issues. Under the Inpres (Instruksi Presiden, President Instruction) school programme, the New Order government established a significant number of schools, particularly primary schools, throughout the Archipelago. Remote and rural areas were not overlooked by the scope of the programme. These provisions offered women wider opportunities to be educated, removing one of the major objections of some parents who were reluctant to send their female offspring to be educated outside the local community, as they also expected them to help out with household tasks.

The demand for a better education increased, keeping pace with the rapid economic growth. The chief beneficiaries have been girls, who have profited proportionately more than boys from the continuing educational expansion, especially at the primary level, even though a substantial gap still yawns at the secondary level and beyond.¹⁸ To coincide with National Education Day on May 2, 1984, Indonesia launched its Compulsory Education Programme for the entire Archipelago. This required that all children between seven and twelve years of age had to be offered equal opportunities to obtain basic education. Importantly, there was to be no discrimination based on sex, regardless of the level of the educational institution. Technical and vocational schools and training institutes, including those of the armed forces, were opened to women and girls. Curricula and teaching materials were the same for male and female students. At present, Indonesian women are admitted to a wide range of schools, from primary to tertiary level of education, from religious to secular, from skilled education to the regular schooling system.

At present, the growing intervention of the government in educational policies and the booming of the modern schooling system has caused some decline in traditional schooling systems like surau.¹⁹ Azra has referred to this process as "surau kian tarandam" (the surau has sunk more deeply).²⁰ Examining the case of surau, he argues that this process of decline can be attributed to the spread of modernisation and secularisation among the Minangkabau community. The effects of these twin processes have ultimately led to the surau system being considered irrelevant to the spirit of modernity. In his work, Ulama dan Madrasah, which examines the situation in Aceh, Baihaqi also remarked on the tendency among Acehnese people to leave the traditional Islamic education of dayah behind when the Islamic ‘modern’ schools or madrasah were introduced into Aceh. Among the wealthier Achnese families, it has been the custom to send their children to study at modern Islamic schools in Minangkabau, Java and even overseas, particularly in Egypt, in pursuit of their religious studies.²¹ The modernisation of dayah as a consequence of the integration of pelajaran umum (non-religious) subjects has encouraged the birth of modern dayah such Bustanul Ulum in Langsa in East Aceh. By and large, compared to dayah or surau particularly, the situation of pesantrens has remained more stable in the face of the penetration of the modern schooling system.

Tracing Women’s Paths in Pesantrens

The origin of the word ‘pesantren’ is derived from the word ‘santri’ with the prefix ‘pe’ and the suffix ‘an’. It simply means a place at which santri can learn, or a place for the student to learn the Quran. The word santri itself also has the specific meaning of a pesantren pupil.²² Another word used to identify a pesantren is ‘pondok’,²³ derived from the Arabic word funduq which means hotel or lodging place. Formerly, *Pondok*²⁴ was the term popularly used to describe pesantren education in Java and Madura. Indeed, often the phrase that was used was a combination of the two – ‘pondok pesantren’. Some might just say ‘pondok’ or just ‘pesantren’. All of those three terms signify the same meaning of a ‘traditional’²⁵ Islamic [boarding] school. In some areas, pesantren students might be popularly referred to as ‘anak pondok’ (the children of the pondok), and the verb for living in a pesantren and being educated there is ‘mondok’ (derived from pondok). This would suggest that what has been predominantly (and traditionally) understood of a pesantren education is as a live-in (boarding) educational system. A strong sense of the boarding school system in the nature of pesantren education is obvious in Boland’s²⁶ comment on pesantren in his book, The Struggle of Islam in Modern Indonesia, when he says that a pesantren is “a sort of private religious boarding-school, where as far as possible individual education is given”.

The earlier history of the pesantren tradition has a link to the Islamic Middle Eastern learning tradition.²⁷ The fact that some early pesantren leaders studied in the Middle East, particularly Mecca, also strengthens any assertion about this kind of interrelationship.²⁸ Snouck Hurgronje's portrayal of the people from the Archipelago who made a pilgrimage to and then chose to live in Mecca provides more facts about those pesantren personages who were haji as well as ulama/kiai.²⁹ In his work on Mecca in the Latter Part of the 19th Century, Snouck Hurgronje provided an extensive ethnographical record about some of those people from the Indo-Malay Archipelago who made the pilgrimage to Mecca and thereafter chose to live and study there for a longer or shorter period of time.³⁰ The founding fathers of both the 'traditionalist' organisation, Nahdlatul Ulama, and the 'modernist' organisation, Muhammadiyah, studied in Mecca with one of the famous ulama from the Archipelago, Syaikh Ahmad Khatib. The connection between the Mecca as the centre and Southeast Asia as the periphery can be traced back to the seventeenth century and even earlier.³¹ The tradition was then perpetuated in such educational institutions as dayah or rangkring in Aceh, or surau in West Sumatra or pondok in the Malay Peninsula and the southernmost part of Thailand, Patani.

As an educational institution, the pesantrens in Java have commonly been associated with male pupils. In the earliest phase of their history, most predominantly during the eighteenth century,³² pesantrens admitted no female pupils, a situation which continued right up to the beginning of the twentieth century.³³ Although since that time, the female element in the tradition of a pesantren has certainly existed in small but significant pockets, the majority of the research on pesantren still disregards women. For instance, in his in-depth research into a Javanese community, in which he propounded the variants santri, abangan and priyayi, the famous anthropologist, Clifford Geertz, portrayed a pesantren as an educational institution associated with the santri variant within Javanese society, as a learning institution for male students only.³⁴

"... at the center of the traditional school system lays[ies] the pondok, also sometimes called pesantren. A pondok consists of a teacher-leader, commonly a pilgrim (hadji), who is called kijaji [kiai], and a group of male pupils, anywhere from three or four to a thousand, called santri."³⁵

Geertz's description clearly 'overlooks' the fact that from the beginning of the twentieth century the pesantren educational system began to admit female pupils, and this information is almost without exception overlooked in majors studies on pesantren.³⁶

As a boarding school, the pesantren represents a microcosm, governed by particular rules and traditions. In his work on the "Principles of Pesantren Education", Wahid portrays pesantrens as "... military academy or a cloister in the sense that those taking part in it experience an exposure to a totality. Compared to the partial educational environment offered by the present-day Indonesian public school system, which acts in the 'general education structure' of the nation, the pesantren is a unique culture in itself'.³⁷

A pesantren does not resemble either a public school or a madrasah. Physically it is a compound consisting of various buildings, forming a complex. A Dutch scholar, Karel Steenbrink, has described a pesantren as a complex consisting of the kiai's residence, a place for religious observance or masjid, one or more dormitories for the students constructed of bamboo or wood, one or more rooms serving as kitchens and one or more rooms for taking baths or performing ablutions.³⁸ Since the time of Steenbrink's fieldwork several decades ago, the physical structure of many pesantrens has undergone significant changes. Today, a pesantren is likely to consist of more permanent buildings. One important aspect, however, has remained the same: a [traditional] pesantren is always a compound that resembles a small village, enshrining its own community and social structure, and governed by the kiai and his family.³⁹ A big pesantren like Pesantren Manba'ul Ulum or Pesantren Tambak Beras, for instance, has several sub-pesantrens under a separate leadership of a member of the kiai's family. Each sub-pesantren has its own name, for instance, Pesantren Putri Al-Fatimiyah or Pesantren Putri al-Lathifiyah, which are run by the great-grandchildren of the founding father, Kiai Wahab Chasbullah. The pesantren of Lirboyo, which has more than ten thousand students, is among the biggest pesantren salaf (traditional) and famous in East Java and beyond. It also has some sub-pesantren complexes. One of the sub-pesantren was Pesantren ar-Risalah, which was designed in terms of concept and facilities from Pesantren Lirboyo by one of the daughters of Kiai Anwar's, who used to be known as Ibu Aina. Pesantren ar-Risalah is a modern pesantren with a compound that can be called 'luxurious' compared with others in the same pesantren area. It is governed by its own idiosyncratic rules. For instance, discipline to do with food was introduced. Students are not allowed to receive food from home, all their food is supplied by the pesantren and is monosodium glutamate (MSG)-free. The pupils are also supplied with traditional herbal drinks called jamu. As the food is supplied, the costs that parents have to pay to have their children educated in this pesantren are also much higher. This sub-pesantren follows a modern curriculum and focuses on learning three different foreign languages: Arabic, English and Mandarin. In all of these characteristics it deviates from the main salaf [traditional] system of pesantren Lirboyo.

A pesantren education should involve not only teaching and learning activities, but also thorough-going instructions about how to behave as a good Muslim. Karcher has described the integrated educational system that characterizes the life of a pesantren:

The integration of learning into the context of life in the pesantren leads to a broad learning concept which is open to the most varied formal and informal methods of teaching and acquisition. *Santri*⁴⁰ learn, together with other santri, under kiai's leadership, within the framework of the Muslim five-daily prayer structure. In that he lives in the pondok, the santri acquires certain behavioral ideals both practical and theoretical, which again reinforce his original motivation to learn. Whether a santri is washing at the well, praying in the mosque, reading Quran, working in the cooperative store, building a house, making a speech, listening to a study group or discussing in the dormitory, it is all a component of the learning process.⁴¹

A kiai is a role model for his pupils, and he is also the point of reference for guidance and counselling on matters related to the pesantren and the lives of its pupils. Therefore, a kiai can be understood as the 'figurative parent' of his pupils.⁴² In some pesantrens, the kiai is even sometimes addressed as 'romo' (a Javanese word for father). Since it is known that the interaction between the kiai and his female students is more limited than the interaction he has with his male students, the question arises who acts as the exemplary figure for the female students? If the kiai is the symbolic father, who is the mother? Why is this not obvious in many works on pesantren?

A kiai and his family are part of the Javanese elite, particularly the santri community.⁴³ Research has revealed that most of them also seem to come from 'well-to do' families or have a middle to upper class socio-economic status. A kiai and his family live in the main residence of the pesantren called the dalem, some of which are big traditional houses inherited from their predecessors, built according to the precepts of colonial-style architecture. Some kiais and their family have renovated their main residence and reconstructed it according to more modern architectural ideas, but whatever they do, they never overlook the fact that the buildings must serve to indicate their higher status compared to that of the other villagers. Pesantrens in Java are strongly nuanced by a system of social stratification, in which the kiai and his family occupy the top level. If a pesantren is referred to as a 'little kingdom', as was the wont of some informants, a kiai is a 'king', and all his family count as members of a royal family. In my observations in the field in some salaf pesantrens in 2003, the manner in which the pupils or santris acknowledged the kiai or nyai resembled the traditional way people showed their respect to the sultan (king) at a Javanese court. As the time for the break for Ramadan approached, some female pupils in one pesantren in Jombang came to ask the nyai's permission to leave the pesantren. One by one they came to the nyai's quarters, knelt down and shuffled slowly towards her and kissed her hand before asking her permission. They used Bahasa Jawa halus (refined Javanese language) to address her.⁴⁴ Although not all of pesantren would observe a similar tradition, all of pesantren pupils do show their pesantren leaders great respect, and this also extends to their nyai. This respect is different from that shown by students in regular schools and madrasah to their school principals.

The santri have been brought up with the idea that paying respect to the ulama as well as to their master or someone who teaches them is part of the learning process itself. This kind of respect is characteristic of traditional Islam.⁴⁵ The blessing of these ulama or teachers is an important factor in deciding whether their study is successful or their life blessed. In the eyes of the pupils and the surrounding community, a kiai or nyai is someone who can deliver barakah (blessing) which is manifested in their evident power. This kind of teaching is commonly found in the kitab taught in pesantren, particularly in Ta'lim Muta'allim written by Al-Zarnuji. Nevertheless, the way they convey their respect in actual daily life of the pesantren or dayah diverges, a natural consequence of the fact that the local culture is also a determinant in shaping such a social interaction. The santri also pay respect to the children of kiai. In some [traditional] pesantren, pupils, particularly female pupils, assist the kiai of his family with household duties, which includes minding the children of the kiai, whom they used to address respectfully by the titles 'Gus' and 'Mas' for his son[s] or 'Neng' for his daughter[s]. Even if a kiai's wife plays only a passive role in the pesantren and its leadership, she is still the nyai of the pesantren, the highest ranking woman in the pesantren context, and hence also commands respect. If she pursues her own trajectory in the leadership of the pesantren and in the public life of community, for instance, on the majelis taklim of her village, the respect for her will be even greater.

Whatever the role a nyai chose to assume in the past, the privilege of becoming the main leader of the pesantren used to be the prerogative of the kiai's son or other male descendants, to the exclusion of his daughter or his wife. Apparently, the problem of succession was arranged systematically: if a kiai had no son, than he would marry off his daughter to the most learned pupil in the pesantren, who would then have sufficient status to take over the leadership of the pesantren from him. Occasionally, a kiai is also believed to be endowed with supra-natural power, known locally as ilmu laduni. In his work, Van Bruinessen cites that for the Javanese, Mecca is also a 'pusat ngelmu', indicating it is also a place for those who desire to acquire immaterial or imminent power.⁴⁶ Importantly, all pesantren leaders are hajji.

By fostering the public image that gus inherit the spiritual attributes of their fathers, the kyai aim to legitimize their sons as their rightful successors. This is very important, because pesantren are simultaneously public institutions in the sense that they involve public interests, and the private property of the kyai. Their sons are in danger of being replaced by able “outsiders” (non-kin) (ibid).⁴⁷

In fact, the leadership of a pesantren will always end up in the hands of the kiai's immediate family, whether consanguineal or affinal. The term of a leadership period is not limited, usually the successor will remain in this position until his death. In official records, the kiai's name always appears as a leader, even though in everyday reality, particularly in pesantren for girls, his wife, daughter, mother, or even sister will have a dominant role. When I visited Pesantren al-Fatimiyah, the biggest pesantren in the well-known Pesantren Tambak Beras of Jombang in 2003, its leader was Kiai Nasir Abd. Fattah, although his wife was also actively involved in the teaching and in leadership. Her mother, Nyai Musyarrofah, was the nyai sepuh (senior nyai) and was consulted in all the pesantren-related matters, her position resembling that of the chair of the pesantren advisory board. At that time, Nyai Musyarrofah still led the communal prayers of the pesantren female pupils in the small mosque in the compound of the pesantren for girls. In Pesantren Lirboyo, both daughters of Kiai Anwar were active in managing the two pesantren for girls in the compound. In the traditional pesantren of Pacul Gowang, Kiai Aziz Mansur was assisted by both his wife and his sister, Nyai Farida, who was well-grounded in Qur'anic studies and had memorized whole passages of the Quran.

In his work, Dhofier describes the kiai as the pivotal figure in a pesantren, a person who exudes enormous religious authority, particularly in his own pesantren. He describes the kyai as “the source of autonomy of power and authority”.⁴⁸ Dhofier's approach in his examination of the figure of a kiai is based on his research in 1977-1978, and since it appeared, it has dominated the bulk of the discourse in research on the pesantren, particularly in Java. Previously, Geertz had understood a kiai in terms of being a ‘cultural broker’.⁴⁹ Horikoshi sees him as an agent of social change.⁵⁰ For his part Dhofier emphasises the central figure of a kiai.⁵¹ At the present time, some pesantrens have been transformed into collective leaderships, their leaders chosen from various people among the kiai's descendants, both his sons [in-law] or his daughters [in-law]. When I conducted the fieldwork in Jombang in 2003, several pesantrens in Jombang had already adopted this kind of leadership, for instance, several sub-pesantrens in Pesantren Tambak Beras were led by the descendants of Kiai Wahab Chasbullah. Kiai Nasir Abd. Fattah is the leader of Pesantren Putri al-Fatimiyah, and Nyai Munjidah is also the leader of another sub-pesantren of Tambak Beras. In Pesantren Salafiyah Syafiiyah Seblak, the sons [in-law] and daughters [in-law] of Nyai Djamilah have assumed the collective leadership. Each of them has various students lodged in the pondok (dormitories) attached to their houses, although the majority of the students live in the pondok near Nyai Mahsunah's residence. Once Pesantren Tebuireng was under the leadership of the late Kiai Yusuf Hasyim. In his era, the pesantren had a majelis tarbiyah wal al ta'lim which resembled a consultative board to discuss any policies issued by the pesantren. This is yet another deviant type of central leadership chosen by a particular kiai.

The pesantren educational system founded on a family-based organisational principle "turned out to be highly effective in integrating members with diverse social, linguistic, ethnic, regional, and kinship background".⁵² When the family principle is applied to the organisation of a pesantren, the kiais embody a father figure, while nyais represent mother figures. In most instances, a nyai does have some limited interaction with the pesantren male pupils, a kiai while very seldom has any interaction with the female pupils, either in terms of quality or number. Now in an era in which the number of female pupils makes up almost half of the total number of pesantren students in Indonesia, the demand for actively involved nyais is steadily increasing in the segregated education setting of a pesantren.

All nyais, whatever their qualifications, are 'leaders' for their female students, in other words they could be said to represent the kiai's leadership for the female students. In most cases, the nyais will be the coordinators of the female pesantren. As leaders of a pesantren, their main responsibility is to lead the female pupils in communal prayers, but some of them also run a regular programme in which they offer taushiyah (advices or guidance) to the students, even without being officially assigned to a formal position in the structure of pesantren leadership. This sort of construction will continue as long as pesantren education continues to be based on the familism system. The emergence of a new religious consciousness in the Indonesian community since the 1980s has resulted in a demand among the ordinary people for various types of instruction in religious knowledge, mostly in the form of majelis taklim. The majority of Badan Keordinasi Majelis Taklim (the Coordinating Body for Islamic Study Groups) members in Indonesia are women. As Frisk has discovered in her book, women's engagement in this sort of religious learning group in Malaysia is attributable to the fact that most of them are housewives who have more flexible time on their hands, while their husbands are occupied with earning an income for the family.⁵³ Likewise, the participants in majelis taklim in Indonesia are also almost always women. With her qualifications and educational background in Islamic teaching, the role of the nyai in this regard is strategic. She mediates the interaction between her pesantren and community and simultaneously negotiates the interpretation of modernity for rural women in villages, a task in which the majelis taklim is just one vehicle. This situation is similar to what Geertz has defined as a 'cultural booker' in his work.⁵⁴

Nyai of Pesantren: 'Santri ibuism'?

Since the early twentieth century, Indonesian women have been strongly identified with the concept of motherhood in the nationalist movements and women organisations. At the first Women's Congress in 1928, a decision was made by both religious and non-religious participants to consider motherhood the highest calling.⁵⁵ This emphasis on motherhood continued throughout the struggle for independence, particularly in the Japanese period (1942-45), when women were expected to perform a motherly role in caring for soldiers and others caught up in those difficult times. Therefore, after the Declaration of Independence in August 1945, "organised women were expected to continue to honour a notion of motherhood that includes caring for wider society".⁵⁶

The familial terms for father, 'bapak', and mother, 'ibu', have assumed strong political connotations in the Indonesian context. 'Ibuism' as an ideological concept cannot be equated with the English idea of motherhood, because it covers a wider range of roles for women as mothers, in addition to those related to purely maternal duties.⁵⁷ The nascent Indonesian society called upon mothers to put their shoulders to the wheel in the task of building a new nation-state; and to a greater degree than the men, they were expected to do this disinterestedly. The promotion of ibuism meant that women existed in a situation where the public and the private were not strictly separate.⁵⁸

In constructing the ideal of State womanhood, or State ibuism, the newly independent nation adopted some of the Javanese ideals of gender relations. The appointment of Sukarno as the first president of the Republic marked the victory of secular nationalist values and paved the way for the dominance of Javanese cultural traits at the national level. This situation also affected the terminology used to articulate gender identities in the new nation, so that, for example, the word 'wanita' meaning a woman replaced the term perempuan, which can also be translated as 'woman'. The subtle difference is that 'wanita' is a Javanese word that connotes ladylike behaviour, typical of the Javanese middle class,⁵⁹ whereas perempuan is a more rounded word for woman.

Sukarno addressed women as 'kaum ibu' (group of mothers) in his call to the nationalist movement, suggesting that motherhood extended to much more than purely maternal duties. Since the very beginning of the independent Indonesian State, "the cultural construction of the family has been the domain where national politics and identity are contested".⁶⁰ Women's role as mothers required them to care for the nation, an idea explicitly expressed in the following speech delivered by the first Indonesian vice-president, Muhammad Hatta:

The task for the present is raising the people with good character and a sense of responsibility. Next to the school teacher it is the mother at home who must lay the basis for the character formation of children. For this reason, the education and training of children, especially girls who will mostly become mothers in future, must be the subject of great efforts by the women's movement, as well as the health and education of society.⁶¹

This attitude did not diminish during Suharto's presidency, in fact it was actually reinforced. Shiraishi argues that to understand the Indonesian family, it is important to guard against taking such common notions as father, mother, and child/children for granted:

... [F]or anyone who learns Indonesian should be familiar with the politico-familial language of father, mother, child, and family, which is there in Indonesia's everyday life. Yet it is important to underline the oddity about all this; Suharto runs the State and guides the nation as father president; his officials as well as citizens follow him as children and the entire nation is imagined as family. This is odd. We know Indonesia's cultural heterogeneity as an anthropological paradise ... There are many family systems in Indonesia not just one, and yet Indonesia is called "family" and imagined as such. What kind of family is it then that singularly represents this multi-ethnic nation as a family?⁶²

Familism is closely related to the national concept of the Indonesian State. Suharto, for example, enjoyed the status of 'Bapak Pembangunan' (the Father of Development). Bearing all this in mind, it is unquestionably possible to make the broad generalization that Indonesian State policies tend to define women in terms of their relationship to men.⁶³ This tendency is reflected in the Garis-Garis Besar Haluan Negara (GBHN, The Guidelines for the National Policy), introduced by the Indonesian government in 1992 and subsequently reissued on a yearly basis. The role of women in relation to State development is explicitly set out in the Guidelines. A woman should be the wife and associate of her husband, an educator and cultivator of the younger generation, a controller/regulator of the household, a worker who contributes to the family's income and a member of community organisations, particularly those dedicated to organising women.⁶⁴ Sjahrir has said that the Guidelines represent an instance of State interference in women's activities, as they consider the family the main unit within which women's activities unfold, and by so doing, they restrict the full range of women's roles.⁶⁵

Suryakusuma introduced the concept of State ibuism to refer to the ideology of the Indonesian State, which defines women as appendages and companions to their husbands, procreators of the nation, mothers and educators of children, housekeepers, and members of Indonesian society, in that order. State ibuism, in Suryakusuma's eyes, is "part and parcel of the bureaucratic State's effort to exercise control over Indonesian society".⁶⁶ The adoption of elite Javanese culture as the ideological macro-structure of Suharto's New Order regime created a homogenous hegemonic image of womanhood and gender relations in Indonesia.⁶⁷ The cultural expressions of this ideal are married women who dedicate their lives tirelessly to their husbands and children. The success of their husband's career and the enhancement of their children's education define the parameters of the wife's role. Suharto inculcated citizenship ideals that were premised on a restrictive notion of gender relations, in which men were associated with the public sphere and women with the domestic field. By promoting the notion that women's primary role was to be housewives, the State could control them through their husbands, who were in turn controlled by the State through their public activities. This enabled the regime to limit women's participation in public life without the use of direct coercion or physical restriction. In his autobiography, in the chapter entitled "Concerning Our Women", Suharto has argued that the main task of Indonesian women's organisations was "to bring Indonesian women to their correct position and role, that is as the mother in a household (ibu rumah tangga) and simultaneously as a motor of development".⁶⁸

The New Order's ideology delineating women's roles led to the establishment of various women's organisations, most of them subordinate branches of the bureaucratic departments in which the women's husbands worked. One of them is Dharma Pertiwi, which brings together the wives of the Indonesian military, but the most notable among them are Dharma Wanita (the organisation of the wives of the civil servants) and PKK (Pembinaan Kesejahteraan Keluarga, Family Welfare Movement). In these organisations, a woman's status and position are ranked according to her husband's position in the bureaucratic hierarchy of the nation. For instance, only a wife of a chairman of another organisation can be the chairperson of a women's organisation, regardless of her capabilities. The aim of Dharma Wanita as written into its constitution is to increase women's participation in national development that suit the nature/duty (kodrat) of woman as wives and housewives. It should be noted that Dharma Wanita covers, without exception, all of the wives of civil servants, and its membership is spread over the whole country, down to the smallest government administration unit and even extends to every Indonesian Representative Office abroad. When the government declared that one of the duties of women as wives was to support their husbands in development (pembangunan), this meant that Dharma Wanita had to guarantee unified family voting for Golkar, the [political] faction of the government.⁶⁹

A notable example of how women can negotiate creatively and manipulate their roles as mothers and carers comes from the organisation called "Suara Ibu Peduli" (The Voice of Caring Mothers). The original aim of the organisation was to provide cheaper baby formula to counter the high cost of living during the economic crisis at the end of the New Order regime. Since its inception, the organisation has also been engaged in more explicit political activities, such as supporting student demonstrations against Suharto's presidency.⁷⁰ This has been described by Arivia as "baby formula politics struggling for the public field".⁷¹ Budianta has argued that the work of Suara Ibu Peduli has raised political awareness among women across different levels of Indonesian society, from national to local, including rural communities.⁷² The image of 'ibu' also inevitably cropped up in Megawati's political struggle for the presidency. Machali states that, "what comes to foreground is the ibu (mother) image rather than the masculine image of 'being in power' she used fighting for the presidency".⁷³ To buttress her argument, Machali quotes Megawati's speech (Kompas, 12 October 1999), in which the latter defined herself as an ibu to her political followers, particularly those of younger generation. "To my children in the whole country, I urge you to go back to work with sincerity. Do not do things drawn from emotion, because you [now] witness your mother standing here".⁷⁴ This appeal was Megawati's response to the riots that occurred after the 1999 General Election, sparked by the anger of her younger followers that she had not been elected to be the fourth Indonesian president, although her party had won the election.

If Javanese cultural ideals imply that a woman's position is bound up with her husband's,⁷⁵ it also follows that they also apply just as aptly to the figure of the nyai. Literally, nyai is a term that designates a married woman.⁷⁶ As Marcoes (1992) demonstrates in her research, the status of a nyai is inextricably bound up with the position of her husband or father. When a woman marries a kiai, she automatically becomes a nyai, regardless of her educational or family background, not forgetting that it is common for a kiai to marry a daughter of another kiai. To a large extent, a nyai derives her power from her relationship to a kiai.⁷⁷

As a consequence, her social position contains elements of both priyayization and ibuism.⁷⁸ Nieuwenhuis states that the concept of ibuism relates to women who are looking after a family, a group, a class, a company or the State, without demanding any share in power or prestige in return.⁷⁹ A nyai can be interpreted as an 'ibu', mother, for the santri community. In most cases, a nyai has the unofficial power to act on behalf of a kiai, particularly when dealing with female students. Whether or not her name is formally recorded in the structure of pesantren leadership, she is the 'female leader' in the pesantren.

As inferred above, endogamous marriage has been commonly practised in the pesantren world in Java, as it is regarded as one of the ways to maintain the continuity of the pesantren tradition. When a daughter of a kiai marries another kiai, she also establishes a link between the two pesantrens, thereby sustaining and expanding the pesantren network. As a consequence, a nyai embodies and acts out ibuism in two respects: on the one hand, she gains derivative power from the position of her husband or father, while on the other, she plays the role of a symbolic mother to the pesantren [female] pupils. Most importantly, leaving these two roles aside, it should be noted that some nyais build on the ascribed status inherent in their position and contribute to the public leadership of the pesantren and beyond in their own right.

When a woman becomes a nyai either by birth or marriage, this status comes with particular inherent 'duties' and 'demands' from both the pesantren and the local community. If she is capable and willing, she can attain a significant position in the pesantren leadership and in the community as a whole. A nyai who is thoroughly competent in Islamic learning typically acts as an instructor for female students. Some nyais run the majelis taklim (Islamic Learning Council) for the local women. There are also some who have been active members and held prominent positions in Muslimat and Fatayat NU, or have pursued wider activities in the political arena. In some cases, nyais have been given the right to manage a pesantren for girls,⁸⁰ and in others they have become the sole directors or leaders of the entire pesantren, although such an event is still quite rare. Her position allows a nyai to act publicly to bring some benefit to the local community as well. Nowadays, the younger generation of nyais is better educated, many have attained higher degrees and acquired a range of specialist skills.⁸¹ Some of them have pursued their Islamic studies at various well-known Islamic universities in Indonesia. The pesantren welcomes and utilises these women's resources, as qualified and skilled women are in considerable demand.

In her research on female preachers in Jakarta and West Java, Marcoes discussed two main categories of muballighah (female preachers), namely nyai and ustazah,⁸² and Faiqoh makes a distinction between those nyais who have mastered the Islamic sciences and are active in religious activities and those who are simply kiai's wives. Besides their domestic duties, the nyais in the first category also engage in social and religious activities in the local community, principally by assuming the role of the muballighah.⁸³ A muballighah is described as a mediator in communicating religious discourse, not only in matters pertaining to eternal life, but more prosaically in those relating to daily life, ranging from personal relations to family health, education and other social issues.⁸⁴ Although a nyai with special qualifications in understanding Islamic sciences will serve to be a mediator for society in communicating Islamic discourse, if she were to concentrate just on her role as a muballighah, this self-imposed restriction would reduce some of the other significant public roles and contributions a nyai can assume and make. My observations in the field suggest that some nyais do indeed act as female preachers in a majelis taklim, but over and above this activity, they are engaged in different public professions and undertook various roles, such as being an instructor/teacher or to some extent also lecturers, religious judges, political leaders or members of the House of Representatives.

As immediate family members of kiais, nyais also attain particular [derivative] 'power' or authority in the hierarchical Javanese culture and the patrilineal leadership of a pesantren, in which a kiai is the central figure.⁸⁵ I shall describe and define the ways in which they live, relate to others and think of themselves and their own identity as pesantren figures, exemplifying 'santri ibuisim'.⁸⁶ With these resources at their disposal, some nyais can also transcend the derivative power and authority accorded them by their kinship status into different and considerable patterns of agency. They are able to do this through the interplay of what some feminists have termed the public and private spheres. This sort of interplay of female power in a pesantren context, in which a nyai manages a 'negotiation' between the public and private spheres of her life, with the resources and status at her disposal and her personal qualifications, will also have a significant meaning for other female groups in the pesantren educational setting, particularly those of the female students. The position provides active, qualified nyais with the opportunity to assume greater agency and extend their public participation beyond the pesantren boundaries, farther than what would be expected of her in her position as just a nyai or an 'ibu' for the pesantren. Some nyais from pesantrens I observed in Jombang were also members of the local parliament. One of them had previously been appointed a religious judge. Such public positions do not have any specific bearing on their duties in pesantren affairs. Nevertheless, as a *Nyai*⁸⁷ of a pesantren, each one also assumes such duties as leading the communal prayers for the santriwati (female students), undertaking instruction in the classroom and giving the female students tausiyah (guidance and counselling) on a regular basis.

All the rights and roles those nyais have achieved are also partly associated with their status as immediate members of a kiai's family, for which the notions of ibuisim and priyayization would be the ways to foster such a power and influence. Their position also suggests the complex intersection of various aspects of culture, religious values and the notion of womanhood in the lives of pesantren women, combined with the concept of charisma, also found among the main figures of traditional Islam,⁸⁸ and the concept of barakah (a bounty of blessing). When I attended an inauguration ceremony for those students who had completed their pesantren education, a father whose son was the best student believed that the success of his son was attributable to the "barakah of ibu nyai". The kiai of the pesantren had passed away, his son had taken over the leading and management of the pesantren, but the happy father referred the barakah to the nyai, not her son who is formally the head of the pesantren. Another example in which barakah is also attributed to a nyai is found in the life of Nyai Khoiriyah. After she had just returned from Mecca where she had lived for nineteen years, several [female] students came to study in her Pesantren Seblak for the express purpose of obtaining a share in her barakah. Their attitude reveals that spiritual power is not only inherited by or belongs to a man, women are equally able to earn it. In the case of Pesantren Nahdlatul Wathan in Lombok, the daughter of Tuan Guru is also believed to have inherited the spiritual power of her father,⁸⁹ and to have become his rightful successor of both the Nahdlatul Wathan organisation and of the actual pesantren.

Another pivotal aspect of traditional Islam found in a pesantren is its connection to Sufi practices. Tarekat and pesantren are closely interconnected, and therefore it is institutions like pesantren, surau or dayah that disseminate and preserve the tarekat orders. Are nyais also involved in this aspect of the pesantren? Initially, it was not part of my plan to pay attention to tarekat in my research, but I changed my plans when during the fieldwork I observed some pesantren women were very actively involved in tarekat orders, even leading their rituals. One such person is Nyai Adlan of Pesantren Cukir, who is particularly involved in leading sufi practices in her pesantren for women from the nearby village. In the field, I also personally participated in the regular manaqiban activities of one nyai. The followers of this manaqiban read the kitab entitled Manaqib, a text derived from the tarekat Qadiriyyah. During the manaqiban, she also took the opportunity to deliver a sermon and to transfer knowledge to the female congregation. In short, she was the leader of the whole process of the manaqiban.

Do Pesantrens Preserve Patriarchal Values?

As an institution the pesantren has been criticized for being traditionally patriarchal.⁹⁰ Regardless of the secular educational content it might include in its curriculum, a pesantren is perceived primarily as a religious institution. A kiai/nyai couple and their students are considered to be the 'guardians' of Islamic traditions, as these have been inscribed in the kitab kuning. Musdah Mulia, the director of Lembaga Kajian Agama dan Gender (the Institute for Religion and Gender Studies), has said that the patriarchal system in which women are subordinated is very evident in religious institutions, including pesantren. He was especially critical of the textbooks on marital life or on the social relationship between husband and wife used in pesantrens that still convey a strong patriarchal impression by placing women in and restricting them to the domestic sphere.⁹¹ Mulia is not the only scholar to have criticized the patriarchal traditions and values of the pesantren. The works of Sabine Kuyper,⁹² Robin L. Bush,⁹³ Anik Farida,⁹⁴ and Mas'udi⁹⁵ also give critical accounts of the gender relations and values in the pesantren world. Pesantren education has been criticised for having a gender bias, which is not confined to its curriculum and/or the textbooks used, but also permeates the structural system of its leadership. Husein Muhammad, a kiai from a pesantren in West Java, has passed a specific comment on the common principles of pesantren leadership succession:

Kiai or ulama often explain that men and women are God's created beings who have an equal position before Him. They also have the same obligation to worship Him and to perform the moral duty of amr m'ruf nahy munkar (enjoining good and forbidding evil acts). They are equally urged to pursue knowledge (ilm), as the prophet said: "to pursue knowledge is obligatory for every Muslim man and Muslim woman". However, such ideas of gender equality are absent when it comes to practical matters. Leadership rights in pesantrens remain the exclusive rights of men. If a kiai passes away, his successor must be his son, even if the first child is a daughter who may have more intellectual capacities than subsequent sons. If the kiai has only daughters, then the leadership will be passed on to his brother or his son-in-law.⁹⁶

This is just one of the characteristics of the patriarchal pesantren leadership that has been maintained over the time. However, as I mentioned in the previous section, women can and do cultivate their path to pesantren leadership by their manipulation of the ibuism concept, assisted in their efforts by the changes in the models of pesantren leadership itself. For instance, recently while under the leadership of Kiai Yusuf Hasyim, Pesantren Tebuireng, where once the kiai ruled supreme as the sole decision maker for all pesantren affairs, a majelis tarbiyah wa ta'lim (Board of Education and Instruction) was introduced as a consultative board to oversee the running of its educational programme. If a kiai does decide to take the concept of 'male religious leader' literally, the resultant idea, that a kiai is one of the basic elements of the pesantren, fails to describe the reality of pesantren directed by women, including such examples as Pesantren Seblak, under the leadership of Nyai Khoiriyah, Pesantren Nahdlatul Wathan, Lombok West Nusa Tenggara, which is led by the daughter of the late Tuan Guru Zainuddin⁹⁷ or a model of collective leadership such as Pesantren Salafiyah Syafi'iyah Seblak. It also overlooks the fact that a number of pesantrens for girls across Indonesia are led by women.

In their formal teaching arrangements, one of the characteristics of pesantren education is [educational] segregation. A number of pesantrens still observe the principle that women are not allowed to teach a male class, but paradoxically the reverse does not apply. Haidlor Ali Ahmad, who has done research on the topic of gender equality and the empowerment of women in pesantren, mentions one inconsistency applied in the pesantren he observed: although women were their formal leaders and had power to control the male staff, they were still not allowed to teach male classes.⁹⁸ One of the nyai interviewed in the field said, "the reason behind this was the stressing of the guarding of chastity", but having said this, she immediately questioned her own statement "What is the difference if a male teacher teaches female pupils, it is just the same, isn't it?" Nevertheless, in the history of the majority of pesantrens, the physical segregation of men and women in their educational system has been axiomatic, and so far there has been no sign of significant changes in this area. Nevertheless, as shown in this book (Chapter Four), some Nyais are perfectly capable of negotiating and creating more dynamic roles for themselves, and eliciting a creative synthesis in the polarised and segregated learning tradition of pesantren.

Pesantren* and Their Affiliated [Women's] Organisations

The pesantren has close links with various organisations, most notably the Nahdlatul Ulama (NU) and its subordinate organisations, including its two women's branch organisations, Muslimat or Fatayat NU. The New Order government considered pesantrens a medium through which it could communicate with the local people. Pesantren leaders were invited to support a wide range of government programmes, perhaps most significantly those related to family planning. At that time, the Muslimat NU, the association of pesantren women, was likewise involved in a number of programmes to assist in socialising the national family planning initiative and other development issues, the dispersion of charity in the society and dakwah.⁹⁹

Nahdlatul Ulama and Its Women's Wing Organisation

Almost without exception, all nyai are affiliated to either the Muslimat or the Fatayat NU organisations, and their affiliation to these organisations is revealed in their social activities. Many among them find that the Fatayat/Muslimat NU is the channel best suited to their broader socio-religious participation. The Muslimat and the Fatayat NU have also provided an outlet for their political activities. In Gender, Politics and Islam, Therese Saliba et al. consistently provide evidence that, through their participation in both religious and nationalist movements, women "often achieve some form of political agency, self-realization, or self-representation, as well as a sense of community, even as the patriarchal values and discourses of the movement limit this agency".¹⁰⁰ Some pesantren women discover that their exposure to wider organisations outside pesantren, particularly the Muslimat NU, offers them access to greater agency in the public socio-political life beyond their pesantren. In fact, their access to political positions and leadership has actually been made possible through their engagement in the Muslimat NU. Pertinently, it should be recalled that at present both the Muslimat NU and the Fatayat NU are working on shaping the discourse on women and Islam in Indonesia, and are consciously tackling the gender bias embedded in pesantren education and the community. Despite the antithesis of traditionalist and progressive groups in the NU structure, some 'new' discourse that is examining women's issues has emerged as a significant internal discussion in this organisation.¹⁰¹

The majority of nyai are able to enjoy benefits through their involvement in organisations like the Muslimat NU or Fatayat NU. Positions of importance come within their grasp, and the door is opened to their engagement in the current public discourse, including contemporary gender issues, as discussed above. One shining example is Nyai Abidah of Jombang who was the member of konstituante (parliament) as a representative of the Muslimat NU. Turning to the discourse, Nyai Noer Chalida of Kediri provides an outstanding example of how the Muslimat NU or an organisation like P3M, which was founded and is led by NU activists, has shaped her perspectives on women's issues. This did not happen overnight, indeed it was a long and somewhat arduous journey, following a trail strewn with various trainings, workshops, dialogues and discussions. Her engagement in this kind of discourse has not been confined to the Muslimat NU, it extended to other organisations such as P3M. Because of her position as a leading figure in the pesantren, she was also able to transfer this model of understanding to her institution.

Although a pesantren is not subordinated structurally to any particular organisation, most of them, especially in East Java, have a strong affiliation to the Nahdlatul Ulama (NU). Most personalities in the pesantren world are also prominent members of this organisation, and hold positions on the Majelis Syuriah (Supreme Religious Council of NU) and the Majelis Tanfidziyah (Executive Board of NU). Any attempt to define what NU is, what it represents and what it stands for cannot avoid the concept of tradition. Tradition is the essence of its self-perception and self-definition. There is no single Indonesian (or Javanese) term which covers the entire semantic range of this self-conscious traditionalism. To cover the discrepancy, foreign loanwords such as 'tradisi' and 'tradisional' are often used. Fealy and Barton have classified NU history into three main phases: the initial phase as a socio-religious organisation; a second phase as either a political party or a formal component of a party; and the third phase marking its return to its socio-religious activities, in which the emphasis has been laid on improving the dialogue between the ulama and upgrading Islamic schools.¹⁰²

The majority of the leaders of the Muslimat are the wives or daughters of the *kiai*¹⁰³ or former pesantren students.¹⁰⁴ Adherence to the pesantren culture, with its emphasis on devotion, independence, cooperation and discipline, is essential to Muslimat members.¹⁰⁵ In its first period, the Muslimat was an integral part of the NU organisation. The idea of establishing a women's section was initially raised during the Fifteenth National Congress of NU held in 1940. The Muslimat was formally approved as a 'badan otonom' (autonomous body) in 1946.¹⁰⁶ When NU became a political party in 1952, the Muslimat NU strove to carry out NU programmes affecting women, making a concerted effort to promote women's religious and national awareness, and educate them about their legal rights and responsibilities.¹⁰⁷

During the Twentieth National Congress in Surabaya, the Muslimat produced significant recommendations on a range of social issues. During the congress, it was stated that some decisions handed down by the Pengadilan Agama (religious court) had discriminated against women, especially in family matters like divorce, polygyny and inheritance. It was decided that the Muslimat should conduct a programme to raise women's awareness of their legal rights. After the first general election in 1955, some Muslimat members, among them Nyai Abidah from Seblak Jombang, became judges of the Pengadilan Agama.¹⁰⁸ Other recommendations made at the congress had to do with the public participation of women. It was agreed that women should be nominated for positions in the State bureaucracy and as candidates for the House of Representatives. In fact, one of the key recommendations was expressed in a petition to the central committee of NU asking it to include members of the Muslimat on the list of priority candidates for the House of Representatives. The preamble to the petition argued that, as a religion and a way of life, Islam offered women the possibility of emancipation on the basis of the kodrat (nature) of women themselves. It stressed that any barriers to achieving this emancipation had their roots in socio-cultural problems. The Muslimat also struggled to eliminate the tradition of erecting a tabir (curtain) to segregate women from men at NU meetings and ceremonies.¹⁰⁹

In the first general election in 1955, NU gained forty-five seats in DPRS (the Dewan Perwakilan Rakyat Sementara), the House of Representatives, and 10 per cent of them were held by cadres of the Muslimat.¹¹⁰ When DPRS was abrogated by Sukarno and a new commission called DPRG was put in its place, Muslimat members still held seven positions in this commission, and also had two seats in MPRS (House of Assembly). Like NU, the Muslimat was a fierce opponent of the Indonesian Communist Party (PKI). When NU blamed PKI for the attempted coup in 1965 and recommended that the party be outlawed, the Muslimat associated itself with the declaration, and Nyai Solichah Wahid Hasyim personally signed the petition.

Observation shows that an organisation like the Muslimat is still busily immersed in the struggle for dominance between the traditional and non-traditional domains. Indeed, the very structure of the organisation itself has created a division between these two domains by assigning women traditional female roles, such as education, health and social welfare. Even today, the women in the NU are not eligible for any high-level committees, such as the Badan Syuriah (Supreme Religious Board), ostensibly because they have their own organisations. Despite this rather spurious argument, the idea has not been entirely dismissed. Said Aqiel Siradj, who is counted among the leading NU figures and is currently the elected leader of the NU organisation, has said that:

[T]here is no reason that prohibits women from becoming members of the Syuriah [Supreme Religious] Board ... Therefore, if now there are some capable nyais, the time has come to give them the opportunity to become members of either the Syuriah or Mustasyariah boards, because Hasan Bashri (d. 110 H) said *fuqaha*¹¹¹ is not restricted to men, but can include all those whose opinion can be accepted as a fatwa,¹¹² whether these be blind men, slaves or women.¹¹³

Feillard, a French scholar who has devoted some of her work to NU and gender issues in Indonesia, described her impressions on the dynamics at work among some of the NU women who tried to reaffirm the political rights of women among their male counterpart NU members at the 1999 NU congress. She mentions one female participant who tried to explain that Islam also recognised women's political rights.¹¹⁴ According to Feillard, this woman's ability to reinforce her facts by referring to the Quran and the sunnah (Prophetic tradition) convinced the forum, the majority of whose participants were kiai. Consequently, some kiais who had previously strongly rejected the idea, were quickly won over and became loyal supporters of women's emancipation. She suggests that the NU women had to find the way to negotiate with their male counterparts (kiais) to be able to define their own political rights. The upshot was that it was agreed that women in Islam are not subordinate, and Islam allows both men and women to serve the nation and society equally.¹¹⁵ Of course, it goes with saying that Muslimat members had been actively involved in national politics long before the congress, so that the actual practice preceded the discourse. No resistance from the kiais was recorded when Muslimat cadres became members of the House of Representatives. Effendi said that since that national congress, female NU intellectuals began to become involved in the forum of bahsul masa'il, in which the roles of their male counterparts had previously been overwhelmingly dominant.¹¹⁶

Some prominent Indonesian Muslims concerned with gender issues are also NU, Muslimat or Fatayat NU members. Among them are Masdar F. Mas'udi (director of P3M), K.H. Husein Muhammad (director of Rahima), Sinta Nuriyah Abd Rahman Wahid (Forum Kajian Kitab Kuning, FK3), Farha Ciciek (Rahima), Badriyah Fayumi and Khofifah Indar Parawansa (Muslimat NU), and Maria Ulfah Ansor (Fatayat NU), even Abdurrahman Wahid or Gusdur is one leading NU light who supports women's rights and gender equity/equality principles. All these people have endeavoured in their various ways to deconstruct the patriarchal discourse in Islamic jurisprudence, and through their efforts have advanced the debate on women's issues in relation to Islam.¹¹⁷ The discourse on gender and Islam in NU circles is pretty dynamic,¹¹⁸ particularly among the younger generation. As pesantrens are affiliated to NU, kiais are basically both members of and leading lights in NU. The nyais, especially those who are active, share in the leadership or are members of the Fatayat or the Muslimat NU. As far as pesantren women are concerned, the Fatayat or Muslimat NU are their socio-religious organisations. During my fieldwork, I found that almost all the nyais or female pesantren figures I met were members of these organisations as they were aware that they are also the vehicles which smoothe their paths to wider public positions and appointments. In 1990, the Fatayat developed a more social-welfare-oriented organisation for women called the Yayasan Kesajahteraan Fatayat, which has no formal position in the NU structure.¹¹⁹ It offers junior kiais/nyais intensive training, concentrating particularly on the issue of women's reproductive health, and naturally includes a discussion of Islam and the gender issue. The results of this training have been published in book form. One such volume is Nyai, Kiai and Pesantren, edited by Siti Zainab,¹²⁰ containing various articles written by [junior] nyai or kiai on the matters of gender and Islam.

The spirit of encouraging the empowerment of women can be traced back from the earliest days of NU. When Kiai Wahid Hasyim assumed the position of Minister of Religious Affairs, he strongly endorsed and supported the opening of the school for women religious judges. At the moment, Muslimat NU leaders are urging for a more gender egalitarian relationship, taking advantage of the channels offered by different organisations with the added agenda of eliminating gender-based violence. As these ideas are gradually finding wider acceptance in the Muslimat and Fatayat NU, it is no wonder that those nyais who are active in the Muslimat NU and Fatayat NU are also being socialised and enlightened by this discourse and by their exposure to the ideas, the workshops, the training and the seminars they have attended.

P3M and 'New' Islamic Organisations

The NGO Perhimpunan Pengembangan Pesantren dan Masyarakat (P3M, Centre for Pesantren and Community Development) began its operations with work devoted to women's issues. This NGO also has a section for women known as the fiqhunnisa', through whose operations women's issues and the controversy about gender and Islam were gradually introduced to the pesantren community. These ideas promoted the empowerment of pesantren women by inviting them to become engaged in the programme, offering trainings, symposia and learning sessions in the framework of women's reproductive health to various pesantrens.¹²¹ In fact, it would be no exaggeration to say that the contact of pesantrens with women's issues in the 1990s was initiated by P3M through its *fiqhunnisa'*¹²² programme, and some pesantrens in Java hosted sessions of the programme.¹²³ The P3M programme of the fiqhunnisa' has now come to an end, nevertheless, Lies Marcoes, the former head of the fiqhunnisa' programme, is convinced that it was quite successful, and that the ideas promoted through it are still being kept alive by organisations like Rahima or PUAN Amal Hayati. Masdar

F. Mas'udi, the director of P3M, is popularly known for initially raising the matter of the critical opinions on the ideas about women portrayed in the kitab kuning.¹²⁴

P3M was among the leading organisations which began to disseminate the idea of "hak-hak reproduksi perempuan" (women's reproductive rights), which also did not overlook the duty of calling for egalitarian gender relationships in the pesantren community. Hak-hak reproduksi perempuan became the banner of the P3M programme on women's issues from the Islamic perspective in the framework of the fiqh pemberdayaan (empowerment of Islamic jurisprudence).

The fiqhunnisa' programme of P3M ended in 2000, but its place was taken by some other NGOs. Rahima emerged in 2000 and set to work to investigate gender issues in the pesantren. Besides Rahima, the NGO called PUAN Amal Hayati participated in this project aimed at popularising gender issues in pesantrens. This NGO set up various women's crisis centres in the pesantrens of East Java that were the research sites for this thesis. The word PUAN is an abbreviation of Pesantren untuk Pemberdayaan Perempuan (Pesantren for Women's Empowerment). What make Rahima and PUAN slightly different from one another is the fact that Rahima is more concerned with gender issues as a subject for discussion in a discourse in seminars, workshops and publications, whereas PUAN concentrates intensively on action, championing advocacy for women who are victims of domestic violence and other maltreatment.¹²⁵ At the time I was conducting my research, there were four pilot projects in the programme. In the meantime, Rahima and PUAN have launched their own periodical publications, the Swara Rahima magazine and the Buletin Amal Hayati. Among the readers and contributors to these publications are those from a pesantren background. Although these projects have opened up new perspectives on gender in the pesantren, it is still difficult to grasp their concrete impact in the face of some of the recalcitrant resistance they have met among pesantren leaders and the community at large. Nevertheless, by persisting with seminars, workshops and publications, plus ensuring the involvement of pesantren people in these programmes, more space has been created for bridging the gap between the text and the context.

The establishment of the NGO Cepdes (Centre for Pesantren and Democracy Studies) in 2000, ushered in a new model for NGO and pesantren interrelationships and for the scope of the influence exercised by the public. This NGO was established by a daughter of a kiai, Lily Zakiyah Munir, in an effort to re-initiate the activities and programmes of her pesantren of origin. Besides its headquarters in Jombang, Cepdes also has an office in Jakarta, which is specifically concerned with gender issues.¹²⁶ The Fahmina Institute, established by Kiai Husein Muhammad in his pesantren in Cirebon, West Java, also represents an NGO that initially emerged from a relationship to a particular pesantren institution. Like Cepdes, the Fahmina Institute is specifically concerned with Islam and gender issues. The majority of the people engaged in these new organisations are also linked to Nahdlatul Ulama or its branch organisations like Muslimat or Fatayat NU, and therefore it would be fair to say that all of these organisations have a particular connection to and are concerned with the pesantren world.

3 Women and Pesantrens in Jombang

A Portrait from the Fieldwork¹

A Glimpse of Jombang² District

Jombang is a region in East Java province, which is the most densely populated province in Indonesia. From a socio-religious perspective, the East Java province is recognised as being the heartland of the biggest Islamic organisation, Nahdlatul Ulama (NU). Since the 1999 general election, the NU-affiliated political party, Partai Kebangkitan Bangsa (PKB, National Awakening Party), has gained the greatest number of voters from this province. The majority of pesantrens in Indonesia have an affiliation to the NU organisation; in fact, two-thirds of the 8,445 pesantrens or 66.06 per cent of the total number of pesantrens are affiliated with NU. The number is even higher in East Java province, with 90 per cent of the pesantrens affiliated to the NU organisation.³

East Java had 2,648 pesantrens (23.4 per cent of the total number of pesantrens in Indonesia) in 2000-01, and 2,953 pesantrens (23.1 per cent) in the 2001-02 school year. In the records of the Ministry of Religious Affairs, East Java province ranks second after West Java in terms of the number of pesantren institutions.⁴ However, although West Java has a higher number compared to East Java, the most important and well-known pesantrens in Indonesia are located in East Java.⁵ Therefore, East Java has a strong association with the pesantren world. This is also supported by the fact that one area in East Java, namely Jombang, which was also the fieldwork area of this research, is popularly known as 'kota santri' (the region of pesantren pupils).

The title of kota santri for Jombang can be understood in several ways. First of all, this area has a concentrated number of pesantren institutions, with large numbers of pupils coming to study there. Moreover, four influential pesantrens, particularly within NU organisations, Tebuireng, Bahrul Ulum Tambak Beras, Manbaul Ma'arif Denanyar and Darul Ulum Rejoso⁶, are located there. In addition, three well-known Indonesian figures who were leading figures of NU (Kiai Hasyim Asy'ari, Kiai Wahab Chasbullah and Kiai Bisri Syansury) also came from pesantrens in Jombang. Hence, Jombang has a strong sense of being the centre of pesantren education as well as being the centre of its affiliated organisation – Nahdlatul Ulama (NU).

The 2003-04 statistics of the Department of Religious Affairs in Jakarta show that Jombang has at least seventy pesantrens spread over the area.⁷ However, the data from the local Department of Religious Affairs of Jombang shows that the number of pesantrens was much higher than seventy. The 2003 figure from the Departemen Agama of

Figure 3.1 Map of Jombang

The location of four major pesantrens in Jombang

- = Pesantren Tambak Beras
- ★ = Pesantren Rejoso
- = Pesantren Denanyar
- ▲ = Pesantren Tebuireng

Jombang suggests that there were 126 pesantrens in Jombang,⁸ whilst the 2004 figure had a record of 142 pesantrens located in the area,⁹ double the national statistic. The contradiction between the two figures is due to the fact that not all of the pesantrens listed by the local Department of Religious Affairs supplied the office with their details. Only seventy out of 146 pesantrens listed have already supplied their data to the local Department of Religious Affairs,¹⁰ which provides the details to Jakarta. This fact also suggests that over time, the number of pesantrens in Jombang has increased markedly, thus giving even stronger weight to the title of Jombang as a town of pesantren pupils (kota santri).

Geographically, Jombang has a strategic position, being located in the centre of the East Java province. The eastern boundary of Jombang is Mojokerto district. Kediri and Malang areas are on the southern side. Nganjuk is on the western side and Lamongan on the northern side.¹¹ Geographically, Jombang is divided into three main areas. Firstly, the northern areas are made up of the sub-districts Plandaan, Kabuh, Ploso, Kudu, and Ngusikan. Secondly, the central area consists primarily of the agricultural areas of the sub-districts Bandar Kedungmulyo, Perak, Gudo, Diwek, Mojoagung, Sumobito, Jogoroto, Peterongan, Jombang, Megaluh, Tembelang, and Kesamben. Thirdly, the southern areas consist of sub-districts Ngoro, Bareng, Mojowarno and Wonosalam. In 2003, Jombang had 21 sub-districts and 306 villages with a population of 1,148,336. Population density is high, with an average of 990 persons per square kilometre (km²). The majority of the Jombang population is Muslim, comprising 98.26 per cent. Protestants are 1.25 per cent, Catholics 0.27 per cent, Buddhists 0.13 per cent and Hindus 0.09 per cent.¹²

Diwek Sub-district

During the time of my fieldwork, I concentrated mostly on the Diwek area, where the main case study of Pesantren Seblak is located. It is in this area that the well-known Pesantren Tebuireng is also located, a pesantren which has been the centre of the pesantren world throughout Java and Madura, particularly in the period of its founder, Kiai Hasyim Asy'ary.¹³

Diwek sub-district consists of 47.7 km² divided into twenty villages. According to the statistical data of September 2003, Diwek had a population of 88,541, with the ratio of 42,472 men to 46,069 women. The majority of Diwek's population are Muslim, who comprise 88,088 persons. There are 36 Catholics, 416 Protestants and one Hindu. With that high number of Muslims, Diwek has 72 mosques and 308 musholla

(small mosques). In terms of employment, most of the people in Diwek are farmers and traders, with figures of 17,646 and 9,988 respectively.

The official data of Diwek in 2001 recorded that at least 19 *pesantrens*¹⁴ are located in the area, with 60 kiais (religious leaders/teachers) and 7,185 pupils. In 2004, the data from the Department of Religious Affairs Jombang suggested that there were at least 21 pesantrens located in Diwek. Apart from a high concentration of pesantrens, Diwek also has a high number of Islamic schools, ranging from kindergarten to tertiary educational level in Jombang. The Diwek area has 12 kindergartens, 39 elementary schools, four junior high schools (two public and two private), four senior high schools (all of them are private schools), 30 Raudhatul Athfals (Islamic kindergartens) with 1,595 pupils and 101 teachers, 32 Madrasah Ibtidaiyahs (Islamic

Figure 3.2 Map of pesantrens location in Diwek

Scale: 1: 100.000

- ■ = Pesantren Seblak (Salafiyah al-Machfudz and Salafiyah Syafiiyah)
- ▲ = Pesantren paculgowang
- ▭ = Pesantren Cukir
- ★ = Pesantren Tebuireng

elementary schools) with 4,706 pupils and 206 teachers, 18 Madrasah Tsanawiyahs (Islamic junior high schools; two public and sixteen private) with 3,189 and 299 teachers, 14 Madrasah Aliyahs (Islamic senior high schools, all of them are private schools) with 3,564 pupils and 319 teachers. The high number of Islamic schools in Diwek is linked to the high concentration of pesantrens in the area. Almost all of the pesantrens have a schooling system within their compound to accommodate the need of pupils to obtain a formal schooling certificate.¹⁵

With a number of pesantrens and several other Islamic schools, Diwek, is a real miniature 'kota santri' during the school semester. In Diwek, pesantrens are mostly concentrated in Cukir and Kwaron hamlets, located on the highway from Jombang to Pare. The spiritual aura of kota santri becomes more intensive during Ramadan. At that time, several pesantrens hold learning sessions or religious activities for both pupils and local people. Pesantren Tebuireng for instance, had a Ramadan class for the pupils, but it was like a 'general lecture' where some local community members also came to learn and sat down on the terrace of the pesantren. Not only that, the Ramadan class used a microphone, to make it accessible to other local people without necessarily having to be present in the complex of the pesantren. One evening during Ramadan, while I bought some small edibles from a store, the sale girl of the store was listening to the session of kitab kuning of Pesantren Tebuireng from the microphone. She also read the kitab with a pen in her hand while serving me. She said she herself had studied the kitab kuning being read when she was a pupil at a pesantren, nevertheless she felt it was always nice to review the kitab kuning each time she had an opportunity like this. By the end of Ramadan, the area is very quiet as the majority of pupils return back home for the semester break and celebrating the *Idul Fitri*¹⁶ days.

A pesantren can also be an integral part of the local people's lives in Jombang, particularly in the villages where they are located. The relationship was much stronger when pesantrens did not supply the daily meal for the pupils, or before a minimarket inside the pesantren compounds was established. Pupils relied significantly on the local people for their daily needs, groceries, food, and other necessities. The pesantrens in the area had broad economic implications for the life of the surrounding community. A village like Cukir, with a densely populated number of pesantrens, seems to be more crowded and have more dynamic economic activities than other villages in the same sub-district of Diwek, including the capital. Photocopy and stationery businesses and small restaurants are quite common in the area, plus rental internet, bank and ATM machine. The area has a commercial motel as well, which is in fact not very common in the village or rural areas in Indonesia.

Moreover, besides the economic impact for the local people as discussed above, the existence of pesantrens coloured socio-religious aspects of community life in the given area. For instance, Diwek has a concentrated number of majelis taklims (Islamic learning councils). In the Indonesian context, the term majelis taklim has a strong association as a place for women to learn Islamic knowledge.¹⁷ The Badan Kontak Majelis Taklim Indonesia (BKMTI, the Board of Indonesian Majelis Taklim Association) is chaired by women, and almost all of the members are women. This is also true in the fieldwork area; the participants of the majelis taklim are mainly women. Almost all pesantrens set up a majelis taklim, which indicates their intention to organize religious and educational opportunities for women.

In the fieldwork area, I also had the opportunity to participate and observe some majelis taklims for women. Once, a majelis taklim was held in a nyai's residence in Tebuireng. The local women gathered together in her house to listen to the Islamic sermon delivered by an invited religious teacher. The majelis taklim had more participants during Ramadan. The nyai only hosted the majelis taklim, but did not deliver the sermon to the participants. The majelis taklim had approximately 20-30 participants who were local women. During the majelis taklim gathering, the nyai was also there, and her presence among the participants had indeed significance for the others. From this case, I observed that, if for some reason a nyai is not able to deliver the sermon or to be an instructor herself for majelis taklim, she still felt responsible for arranging them for her community, and ensuring that the local people, particularly women, had access to this kind of socio-religious activity. Another religious gathering I took part in was the manaqiban in Paculgowang, led by a nyai from the local pesantren. Some 40-70 locals joined this manaqiban. Through this kind of activity, a pesantren maintains a close relationship with the local people, and at the same time the pesantren and their leaders, both kiai and nyai, extend their religious authority over both the pesantren and the local society. The participants are always women, and it is an effective method to deliver particular concepts and ideas. Once I observed a nyai in the field work area, who seriously encouraged the local women to let their daughters become well educated, and not marry them off at an early age.¹⁸

The message conveyed in the religious congregation is not always something related to ibadah (religious rituals), but also covers the daily lives and social problems faced by the society. In this case, a nyai could be an actor in conveying ideas of social change to her society through her agency.

One of nyais from an area outside Jombang also involved herself as a coordinator and regular instructor for a majelis taklim she held in her house. The female pupils of her pesantren prepared food, snacks and drinks for the participants. Since about 80-100 participants turned up, the living room and some other parts of her house were full with the participants of this religious congregation. The pupils of her pesantren had been busy making preparations since after maghrib (dawn) time. The nyai said her late parents had trained her and engaged her in this kind of socio-religious activity when they were alive, therefore she felt responsible for continuing the traditions, more importantly her capability in transmitting the knowledge through her preaching and sermons to the participants had been an advantage. In the case of manaqiban, the nyai also followed her mother's path; her mother in her eyes had been someone who was concerned with sharing and providing opportunities for women to learn, yet learning here means particularly religious teaching and values. Family has been among strong factors that shape and develop the agency of some or even most pesantren women.

Pesantren Tebuireng and Kiai Hasyim Asy'ary

Looking at the pesantren world in Jombang, and more particularly in Diwek, we will unavoidably touch on the existence of the well-known Pesantren Tebuireng. Pesantren Seblak, which is the main case study of this research, also has a strong connection to this pesantren; and the founders of Pesantren Seblak are the main focus of this research. Kiai Hasyim Asy'ary himself is still perceived as a great and charismatic pesantren kiai, over half a century after his death, as well as a respected national religious leader. His religious authority has had a great influence on the pesantren network as well as on the local community. He was also a private instructor for teaching Islamic sciences to his daughter (Nyai Khoiriyah) and his granddaughter (Nyai Abidah), both of whom are discussed in detail in the next chapter. As a charismatic religious as well as pesantren leader himself, his support for women's education had a significant impact on the pesantren world, for NU and for local communities.

In the fieldwork area, most founding fathers or kiais of pesantrens in Jombang or in Diwek have had a particular link with this pesantren. Pesantren Walisongo Cukir was founded by Kiai Adlan Ali, who was among Kiai Hasyim Asy'ary's pupils and then married Kiai Hasyim Asy'ary's niece. Pesantren Denanyar was founded by Kiai Bisri Syansury, his former pupil as well, then Kiai Bisri Syansury's daughter was married to Kiai Hasyim Asy'ary's son. Pesantren Madrasatul Quran, which is also located in Diwek, was founded by his grandson-in-law, Kiai Yusuf Mashar, and there are still some pesantrens in the area that were established by either graduates or the extended family of Pesantren Tebuireng. The nyais studied in this book were also related to Kiai Hasyim Asy'ary and Pesantren Tebuireng.

Kiai Hasyim Asy'ary established Pesantren Tebuireng on August 3, 1899 in Cukir, Sub-district Diwek, 8 km to the south of the capital district of Jombang, and located near a highway connecting Jombang and Pare. The pesantren was named after the hamlet in which it is located. This pesantren has not had an Arabic name as other pesantrens used to have. Before the establishment of the pesantren, Tebuireng was a hamlet referred to by the local people as a sort of 'black area' for its prostitution, gambling, etc. The existence of a pesantren in the area has acted as a counter-culture to the capitalist economic activities and their cultural impacts on the local people. The capitalist economy was represented by the establishment of a sugar factory, and the non-local culture which followed the capitalist economic activities was considered harmful to the identity of the socio-religious culture and tradition of the local people. Kiai Hasyim Asy'ary was the first leader of the pesantren. Upon his death in 1947, the leadership of the pesantren was 'inherited' by his sons and sons-in-law. From 1947 until 1950, Wahid Hasyim (his son) was the director of the pesantren. From 1951 until 1952, the director was Abdul Karim Hasyim (another son), followed by Achmad Baidlowi (his son-in-law) from 1951 until 1952; and from 1952-1965, Abdul Kholik Hasyim (his son).

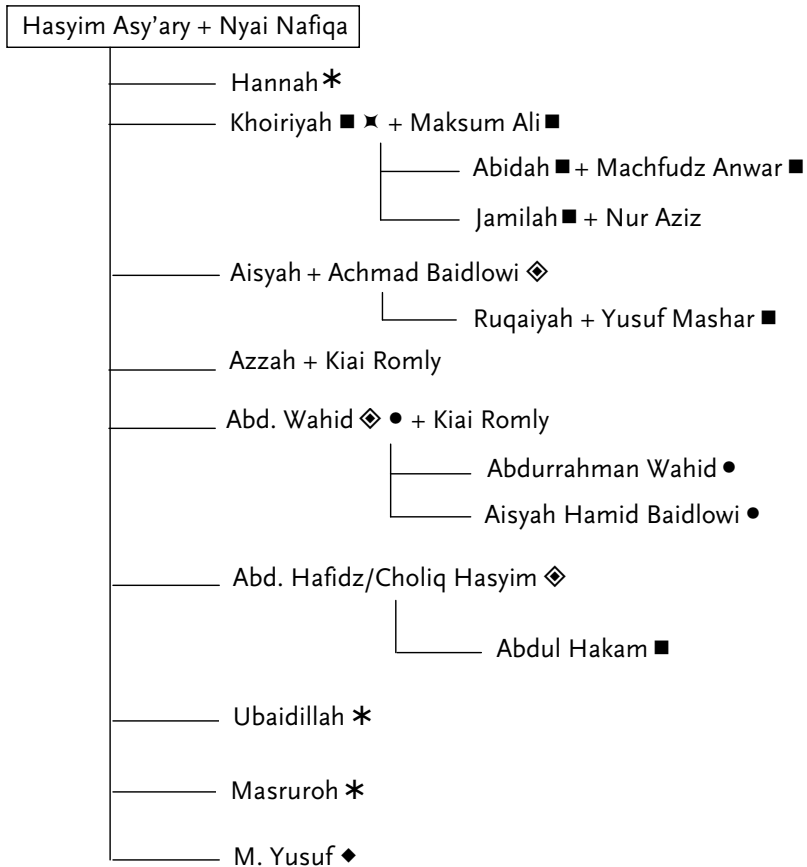

A fact that is not commonly known and was not mentioned in other research on Pesantren Tebuireng is that Kiai Hasyim Asy'ary's first daughter, Nyai Khoiriyah, had also been a Pesantren Director in the transition period. This fact is only mentioned in Buku Kenangan Peringatan Satu Abad Pesantren Tebuireng 1999 (The book on the memorial of one decade of Pesantren Tebuireng in 1999), in which Nyai Khoiriyah Hasyim was also recorded as a director of the pesantren for the transition period before Kiai Yusuf Hasyim was appointed in 1965. The adopted son of Nyai Khoiriyah also confirmed this 'un-known' case, as he said at that time it was Nyai Khoiriyah who signed the certificates of graduation for the pupils of Pesantren Tebuireng.¹⁹ Although it was a short period of time and a transition period, this fact is quite significant, because Pesantren Tebuireng was a pesantren for boys. There were no female pupils there. In such a case, it is very rare to find a woman in the position of a leader. When it was founded, Pesantren Tebuireng had no female pupils. In 2003 the pesantren began to accept female pupils, starting with 18 who were lodged in a 'luxurious' pondok.²⁰ Before that year, parents who wanted to send their daughters to Pesantren Tebuireng sent them to Pesantren Seblak, which is located nearby. As mentioned before, the pesantren was established by the immediate family of Kiai Hasyim Asy'ary. Before 2003, for those parents who wanted to send their daughters to study in Pesantren Tebuireng and realized that there was no pesantren for girls, the usual choice was Pesantren Seblak. Pesantren Seblak acted as the pesantren putri (pesantren for girls) of Pesantren Tebuireng.

The popularity of Pesantren Tebuireng is inseparably linked to the figure of Kiai Hasyim Asy'ary as a charismatic religious leader. Dhofier's research on the pesantren tradition also supports this theory, with his focus on the figure of Kiai Hasyim Asy'ary, popularly known as 'hadhratus syaikh'²¹. In Hasyim Asy'ary's time, the pupils and kiais from other pesantrens came together to live in (mondok), particularly during Ramadan (fasting month). He had a strong social religious influence and authority, not only among the ulamas in East Java, but also within the Indonesian community in general, especially in his capacity as NU leader.²² The Japanese colonial government also has a record on Kiai Hasyim Asy'ary as one of the entries in an encyclopaedia on several influential figures of Java. This encyclopaedia, published in 1944 by the Gunseikabu (Japanese Military Government), said: "Hasyim Asy'ary, Kiai Haji Muhammad, a farmer²³ and a religious teacher at Tebuireng (Jombang). He was born in Gedang (Jombang) and studied in Mecca; he was the chairman of the NU organization."²⁴

Hasyim Asy'ary was born on February 14, 1871.²⁵ In 1876, little Hasyim Asy'ary and his parents moved to a village, Keras, located in the southern part of Jombang. He learned from his father the basic study of reciting the Quran. Kiai Hasyim Asy'ary was a son of Kiai Asy'ary, the founding father of Pesantren Al-Asy'ary in Keras²⁶ Jombang. Kiai Asy'ary was not from Jombang originally. He came from Demak, an area in central Java, and married Halimah, a grandchild of Kiai Shoichah who founded one of the four great pesantrens in Jombang, namely Pesantren Tambak Beras. When he was fifteen, young Hasyim Asy'ary began to visit several pesantrens in East Java to learn the Islamic sciences from different ulamas/kiais. He was a santri kelana (wandering pesantren pupil), who 'wandered' from one pesantren to another throughout East Java and Madura.²⁷ He was recorded as one of the pupils of Kiai Cholil Bangkalan²⁸ in Madura. In 1891, Hasyim Asy'ary studied at Pesantren Siwalan Panji Sidoarjo, and he was married off to the daughter of the pesantren leader. After this marriage, together with his wife and his father-in-law, he made a pilgrimage to Mecca. His wife passed away in Mecca after giving birth to a son, then the son also died, not long after his mother. Hasyim Asy'ary left Mecca and returned to Indonesia. Later on, he made a second journey to Mecca and spent an additional year living and learning there.²⁹ He was recorded as being among the pupils of several *ulama Jawi*³⁰ in Mecca, such as Syaikh Mahfudz al-Tirmasi³¹, Syaikh Nawawi al-Bantani³² and Syaikh Ahmad Khatib al-Minangkabau³³.

Kiai Hasyim Asy'ary married again, this time to Nyai Nafiqah. They had ten children. Their first daughter, Hannah, was born in 1903 and

Figure 3.3 The tree of Kiai Hasyim As'ary's family

- * died in infancy
- ◆ former leaders of Pesantren Tebuireng
- ◆ former leaders of Pesantren Tebuireng
- Founders or leaders of other pesantrens
- National leading figures of NU/Muslimat Fatayat NU
- ✕ former leader of Pesantren Tebuireng [in a transition period] passed away in the same year. His second daughter was Khoiriyah, later married to Kiai Maksum Ali, who then founded Pesantren Seblak. From her marriage to Kiai Maksum Ali, Khoiriyah only had two daughters who lived: Abidah and Jamilah. Jamilah was the director of Pesantren Seblak from 1969 until 1988. She was also the chairperson of Muslimat NU East Java. She was married to Kiai Nur Aziz Ma'sum from Pesantren Singosari Malang.³⁴ Kiai Hasyim Asy'ary's third child was Aisyah, who married Kiai Ahmad Baidlowi. The fourth child was Azzah, who married Kiai Idris from Pesantren Darul Ulum. The fifth child was Abdul Wahid Hasyim, who married Nyai Solichah from Pesantren Denanyar. The sixth child was Hafiz, but mostly known as Choliq, the seventh child was Abdul Karim, the eighth and the ninth children died in infancy, and the tenth one was Muhammad Yusuf; at the time this research conducted, Muhammad Yusuf was leader of Pesantren Tebuireng.

Almost of all his sons assumed the leadership of Pesantren Tebuireng. All of his daughters were married to kiais or someone from a kiai's family. Some of his grandchildren also had roles in and a strong attachment to the pesantren and NU community. His grandson, Abdurrahman Wahid, the fourth president of the Indonesian Republic, was among the figures involved in the leadership of Pesantren Denanyar, and a former leader of the NU organisation. In 2010 Abdurrahman Wahid was proposed by the Indonesian government for the title of 'pahlawan nasional' (national hero) for his determined efforts and works, particularly in dealing with minority groups and pluralism in Indonesia. Another grandson, Abdul Hakam, established a pesantren in Tebuireng called Darul Hakam. His granddaughters, Abidah and Jamilah, were among the leaders of Pesantren Seblak, another granddaughter, Ruqaiyah, married Kiai Yusuf Mashar, the founding father of Pesantren Madrasatul Quran, and is known as Nyai Ruqaiyah or Nyai Yusuf Mashar. As pesantren figures, they were all involved in NU and the Muslimat NU organization. Some of them even chaired either the main organisation of NU or its women's wing organization of Muslimat or Fatayat NU. His daughter Nyai Khoiriyah was among the leaders of Muslimat NU at the national level, whereas his granddaughters, Nyai Abidah and Nyai Jamilah, were the leaders of Muslimat in East Java province. His daughter-in-law, Nyai Solichah Wahid Hasyim, was also an influential Muslimat NU leader, who was then followed by her daughter, Aisyah Hamid Baidlowi.

Pesantrens* for Girls in Jombang

The first pesantren for girls in Jombang was Pesantren Denanyar, and it was also the first female pesantren among the NU community. Initially, in 1917 Kiai Bisri Syansury only set up a learning session in his pesantren for male pupils. In 1919, due to the efforts of Nyai Nurkhodijah who invited the local girls, the pesantren started to draw some neighbourhood girls who came to the pesantren and learned informally at the rear terrace of Kiai Bisri's residence.

[K]iai Bisri opened a special class for female attendees, something that had never happened in the pesantren world. The daughters of his neighbours were gathered to learn in his front yard to learn Islamic sciences. This rare action was inspected by his teacher Kiai Hasyim Asy'ary, who intentionally came to have a look at this special class. Kiai Bisri kept going with his experiment, although he did not receive specific approval from his teacher, who also did not prohibit him for this purpose. Before, he had never done anything until he obtained a consent from his respected teacher, such as in the case of his objection to joining the branch of Syarikat Islam in Mecca. His effort to open the class for female attendants has changed his personality as a result of his maturity...³⁵

In 1923, the so-called Madrasah Salafiyah of Pesantren Denanyar was established, but it was only for male pupils. Then, in 1930, a madrasah was also established for female pupils. This means that although the informal class for female pupils started around 1919 in the residence of Kiai Bisri Syansury and Nyai Nurkhodijah, it was only in 1930 that the formal class for female pupils was opened. In the meantime, some people expressed their disagreement with the establishment of pesantren for girls³⁶ because they thought that women did not deserve to be educated.³⁷ The second pesantren for girls in Jombang was established in Pesantren Seblak Diwek in 1939. Pesantren Seblak itself was initially established in 1921 under the leadership of Kiai Maksum Ali, and upon his death was then taken over by his wife, Nyai Khoiriyah, in 1933. Afterwards, Kiai Machfudz Anwar and Nyai Abidah were the leaders of the pesantren from 1938. In 1939, the pesantren started to accept female pupils on the recommendation of Kiai Hasyim Asy'ary. The initial place for those female pupils was the living-room of Nyai Abidah and Kiai Machfudz Anwar's residence. This is one of the situations in which public and private overlapped and is contingent; in which even within her private quarters, a Nyai like Nyai Abidah could also perform public roles.

In 1949, Pesantren Tambak Beras, one of the four major pesantrens in Jombang, also founded a pesantren for girls. This effort was undertaken by the son of Kiai Chasbullah, namely Kiai Abd. Fattah, and his wife Nyai Musyarrofah, who was also the daughter of Kiai Isri Syansury and Nyai Nurkhodijah. Kiai Abd. Fattah and Nyai Musyarrofah founded a pesantren for girls, namely Asrama Putri Selatan, in 1949; it later on became Pesantren Putri al-Fatimiyyah. Kiai Abd. Fattah has formally been the leader of the pesantren for girls al-Fatimiyyah and Pesantren Tambak Beras in general. Today, Pesantren Tambak Beras is well known for its pesantrens for girls. The largest one is that of al-Fatimiyyah. In 2003, it was under the leadership of Kiai Nasir Abd. Fattah, and his wife Nyai Ummu Salma, with over 1000 female pupils from different areas of Java and Indonesia. Due to her age and health, Nyai Musyarrofah was no longer active in managing the pesantren, nevertheless she was still a well-respected nyai within it. Apart from al-Fatimiyyah, there were several other pesantrens for girls in the compounds of Pesantren Tambak Beras, such as al-Lathifiyyah, which is directed by Nyai Munjidah Wahab, who is also a chairperson of Muslimat NU of Jombang. Both al-Fatimiyyah and al-Lathifiyyah are named after the nyais from the pesantrens. There is also another notable pesantren for girls in Jombang, namely Pesantren Walisongo Cukir in Diwek. The pesantren started from Perguruan Putri Muallimat (female college of Muallimat). It is established in 1951, to open more access for women's education in the area.

Pesantren Seblak: Women's Educational Leadership

The main case of this study is Pesantren Seblak, which is located in Kwaron village of Diwek sub-district. The village lies on 199,750 hectares of land. Of its total population of 4,340, there are 1,808 men and 2,532 women. Most of the people in Kwaron are farmers, either owners of the fields or workers who rent the fields from the owners. In terms of educational institutions, Kwaron has both a primary school and an Islamic primary school, namely Madrasah Ibtidaiyah. However, for the secondary level, only Islamic schools are available. The majority of Kwaron's population is Muslim; they make up 4,338 of 4,340 of Kwaron's total population, with three mosques and sixteen musholla (small mosques) located in the area. Three pesantrens are located in the area, namely Salafiyah Seblak (Salafiyah al-Machfudz), Salafiyah Syafiiyah Seblak and Hudaya.³⁸ Pesantren Seblak is a special case in this regard since it has dominant female figures in its leadership. Until 1988, two kiais, namely Kiai Maksum Ali (the founding father) and Kiai Machfudz Anwar, and three nyais, namely Nyai Khoiriyah, Nyai Abidah and Nyai Jamilah, have all been recorded as the leaders of the pesantren. This fact confirms what one of the grandchildren of the pesantren's founding father said: "in Jombang, Pesantren Seblak would be the reference for the study on female leadership in pesantrens, compared to all other pesantrens in the area..."³⁹

Pesantren Seblak (1921-1988)

Pesantren Seblak was founded in 1921 by Kiai Maksum Ali,⁴⁰ the son-in-law of Kiai Hasyim Asy'ary. Kiai Maksum Ali married Kiai Hasyim Asy'ary's daughter, Nyai Khoiriyah Hasyim. They had seven children, but most of them died in infancy. Only two daughters survived, Abidah and Jamilah. The history of Pesantren Seblak began when Kiai Hasyim Asy'ary bought several hectares of land in Seblak from Pak Tiah, on which a small mosque was then built. It was also mentioned that Kiai Hasyim Asy'ary was offered several options to establish the pesantren in other locations, firstly Seblak, secondly Jombang town and thirdly at the border between Jombang and Kediri districts. Like Pesantren Tebuireng, this pesantren was also established in an area of theft and prostitution. The situation in Seblak changed over time due to the influence of the religious and moral teachings conveyed by the pesantren.

In 1926, Kiai Maksum Ali introduced a classical educational system, however, learning kitab kunings still dominated the instructional program. In its development, the classical instructional system introduced by Kiai Maksum Ali became the seed of the formal educational institution or the schooling system at the pesantren itself. In the meantime, Kiai Hasyim Asy'ary also allowed some pupils of Pesantren Tebuireng to study in Seblak as part of the effort to ensure the pesantren had some initial pupils. Like other pesantrens, in its early history, Pesantren Seblak only had male pupils (santris). When Kiai Maksum Ali passed away in 1933, the leadership of the pesantren was taken over by his wife, Nyai Khoiriyah.⁴¹ In 1938, Nyai Khoiriyah left for Mecca because of her marriage to an Indonesian ulama who lived in Mecca. The pesantren was run by her son-in-law, Kiai Machfudz Anwar and her daughter, Nyai Abidah. In this period the pesantren began to accommodate female pupils. The wall and a small road inbetween segregated the location of the pesantren for boys and the pesantren for girls.

At that time (during the 1930s), no pesantren for girls was recorded in Tebuireng and the surrounding area. The only pesantren for girls in Jombang was the one located in Pesantren Denanyar. Kiai Hasyim Asy'ary sent his younger granddaughters to the pesantren for girls in Denanyar, which is about 15 km from Tebuireng. Those girls took *andong*⁴² to get to Denanyar every day. They had to leave very early in the morning to get to Denanyar on time, and it took several hours to get there. It was tiring for those little girls. Feeling very sorry for his young granddaughters, Kiai Hasyim Asy'ary initiated the idea of establishing pesantren for girls in their local area. Nyai Abidah, his older granddaughter, was asked to become an instructor for the newly established pesantren for girls in Seblak. Nyai Abidah began her instruction for a small group of female pupils in her living room in Seblak. This informal group gradually developed into two classes, year one and year two. Commencing from Nyai Abidah's living room, the existence of the pesantren for girls began to be popular within the local community, and the number of female pupils steadily increased.

Meanwhile, during the later Dutch colonial period and Japanese occupation in 1942, followed by the return of the Dutch after Indonesian independence in 1945, like all other pesantrens, this pesantren was also suspected of being the base camp of lasykar hizbullah (the civilians who were trained to fight against the colonial military). At that time, a number of boys from the network of pesantrens in the area were actively involved in the struggle for Indonesian independence. Therefore, colonial armies regularly spied on the pesantren. In such a situation, to make the learning process secure and safe for the pupils, the pesantren for girls held their activities in the backyard of Nyai Abidah's residence. At one stage, the instruction was also transferred to an isolated place, which had its pedestrian access located at the local sawah (rice field).

Following the revolution and the withdrawal of the Dutch, the socio-political situation in Indonesia settled down in 1950, and Pesantren Seblak began to be resettled as well. In the same year, the pesantren for girls produced its first graduates. The existence of these female graduates created a new issue. Where could they pursue further education? As a response, the Muallimat Sekolah Guru Putri (Female Teacher Education College) was established in Seblak. Non-local pupils also attended this school; therefore, lodgings or accommodation for them was in high demand. Nyai Abidah's residence was set up to be the initial accommodation for those non-local female pupils. Her dining room was used as the bedroom for several female pupils in 1952. The first pupils who lived there were two girls who came from Bandang Ngoro Jombang. During the following years, more pupils came to live in the pesantren. Nyai Abidah's residence could not accommodate all of them, so the first dormitory for female pupils was built.

In 1957, Nyai Khoiriyah returned back to Indonesia after living for 19 years in Mecca. Upon her return, she resumed the leadership of Pesantren Seblak. Nyai Abidah and her husband moved to Jombang to manage the Pendidikan Guru Agama Putri Nahdlatul Ulama (NU Female Religious Teacher Training College) there. In 1969, Nyai Khoiriyah's health began to deteriorate. One of her daughters, Nyai Jamilah who was married to Kiai Nur Aziz from Pesantren Singosari in Malang, returned to Seblak to assist her mother in managing the pesantren. In 1983, Nyai Khoiriyah passed away. The leadership of the pesantren was then taken over by her second daughter, Nyai Jamilah. During her leadership, the site of the pesantren campus was extended. As the daughter of Kiai Maksum Ali, she inherited some lands within the pesantren campus. Those lands were used to build several other buildings in the pesantren complex. In 1979, the pesantren was registered as a foundation, called Yayasan Khoiriyah Hasyim (Khoiriyah Hasyim Foundation). As the umbrella organisation, it was named after Nyai Khoiriyah Hasyim.

In general, until 1988, the periods of Pesantren Seblak leadership are as follows:

- Kiai Maksum Ali (1921-1933)
- Nyai Khoiriyah (1933-1937)
- Kiai Machfudz and Nyai Abidah (1937-1957)
- Nyai Khoiriyah (1957-1969)
- Nyai Jamilah (1969-1988)

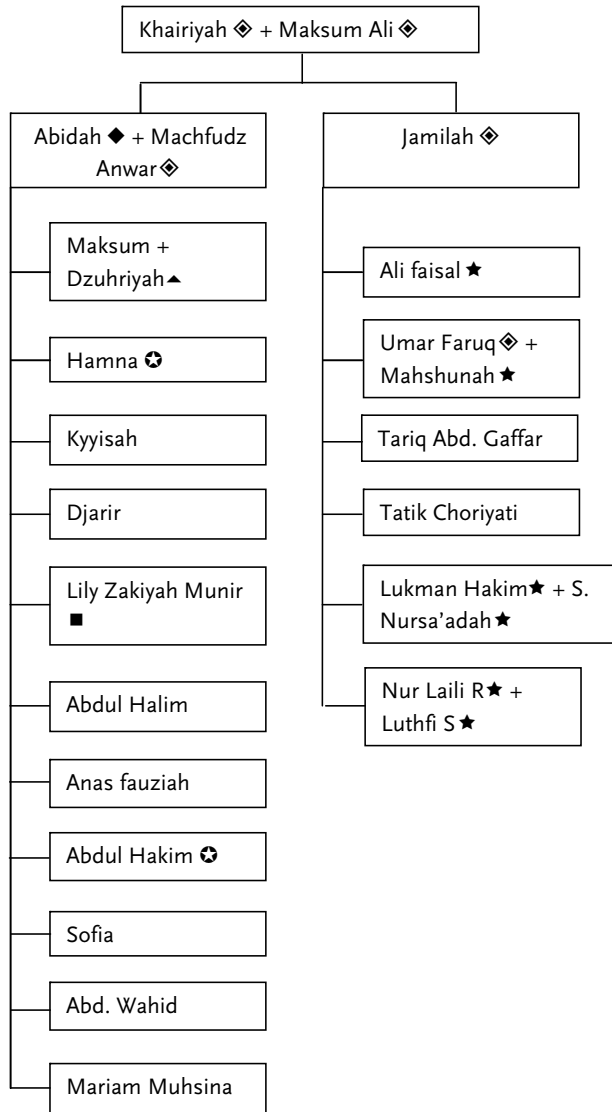

In 1988, Nyai Jamilah passed away, and this ended the central leadership.

Pesantren Seblak (1988-2003)

After Nyai Jamilah's period, the pesantren separated into two different leaderships and separate managements, namely Pesantren Salafiyah al-Machfudz, which went to Nyai Abidah's family, and Pesantren Salafiyah Syafiyah which went to Nyai Jamilah's family. The former was located at the original pesantren founded by Kiai Maksum Ali. This pesantren was directed by both Kiai Machfudz Anwar and his wife, Nyai Abidah. When Kiai Machfudz passed away, Nyai Abidah and her children managed the pesantren. Nyai Jamilah's sons and daughter managed another part of the pesantren, an extension established during Nyai Jamilah's leadership, known as Pesantren Salafiyah Syafiyah Seblak. Pesantren Salafiyah al-Machfudz provided no formal education; the pupils who lived in the pesantren used to have formal education outside the pesantren campus, either in Wahid Hasyim Islamic Secondary School, the university of Hasyim Asy'ary or Madrasah Muallimat (the education training college) of Cukir, which are located in the surrounding area.

Nyai Khoiriyah and Kiai Maksum Ali had two surviving daughters, Nyai Abidah and Nyai Jamilah. Both of them earned significant positions and contributed to the development of the pesantren. By the time I conducted any research in 2003, the pesantren was under the leadership of the second and third generation of the founding father. Since the first generation, the pesantren had already had a powerful female figure, Nyai Khoiriyah, followed by the second generation of Nyai Abidah and Nyai Jamilah and the third generation, Nyai Mahshunah. The third generation, apart from Nyai Mahshunah who played a significant role as Nyai in the period of her husband's leadership, also has some other powerful female figures. For instance, Lily Zakiyah Munir (Nyai Abidah's daughter) is actively engaged in searching for funding for pesantren development and comes forward with programs and ideas on pesantren issues through the NGO Cepdes (Centre for Pesantren and Democracy Studies) that she founded. Hamna (Nyai Abidah's daughter) was appointed as a leader of the pesantren for a short period of time,

Figure 3.4 The tree of kinship in the leadership of Pesantren Seblak

- ♦ = former leaders of Pesantren Seblak (both Salafiyah Al-Machfudz and Syafiyah)
- ◆ = current leader of Pesantren Salafiyah al-Machfudz
- ▲ = current member of structural leadership of Pesantren Salafiyah al-Machfudz.
- ★ = committee members of Khoiriyah Hasyim foundation (Salafiyah Syafiyah)
- ☼ = former temporary leaders of Pesantren Salafiyah al Machfudz
- = director of Cepdes (Centre for Pesantren and Democracy Studies) and Nyai Abidah's daughter-in-law, Dzuhriyah also contributed to the management of the pesantren, she held the position of pelindung of the Pesantren Salafiyah al-Machfudz. Another female figure is Nur Laili Rahmah (Nyai Jamilah's daughter), who leads the formal schooling in the pesantren. She is the principal of the Islamic secondary school (for girls) in the pesantren. Siti Nursa'adah (Nyai Jamilah's daughter-in-law) assists in her position as a kind of coordinator for the pesantren for girls as well; her husband is among the leaders in the current collective leadership of the pesantren. In terms of the structural leadership, this is the most recent organisational structure of Salafiyah Al-Machfudz (for the period 2004-2005):

Pelindung	Nyai Hj. Abidah (f) Nyai Dzuhriyah (f)
Pengasuh (directors)	Nyai Hj. Abidah (f) Eni Jamilah (f)
Penasehat (adviser)	H. Ahmad Halim, MA (m) K.H. Taufiqur Rahman (m) Dr. KH. Kayysiah (m) Djahrir Mahfudz (m)
Ketua (chairperson)	Sudarpo Said, S.Ag (m) Rondi Zein (m)
Sekretaris (secretary)	M. Nasirun (m)
Bendahara (treasurer)	Ali Masharuddin (m) Supriyadi (m)

Nyai Abidah was the main figure of the pesantren and she was assisted with the daily pesantren leadership and management by her daughter-in-law, Nyai Dzuhriyah. In 2003, Nyai Abidah's grandson married a graduate of Pesantren Denanyar, Eni Jamilah, who is in her early twenties. The presence of Eni Jamilah in the structure of the pesantren leadership is quite recent. As someone who married into the kiais/nyais family with a pesantren education background, she was perceived as capable enough for the position and acceptable because of her marital links. One of the pupils from Pesantren Seblak said that some religious duties, such as the leader of the communal prayers, had been delegated by Nyai Abidah to Eni Jamilah, something that she did by herself before her arrival.

Another part of Pesantren Seblak was directed by Nyai Jamilah's family. When Nyai Jamilah passed away, her son, Umar Faruq, well-known as Bapak Faruq, took over the leadership of the pesantren. Bapak Faruq's siblings were also involved in a collective leadership of the pesantren after their mother's period. The arrangement of the committee during Bapak Faruq's period was:

Figure 3.5 Map of Pesantren Salafiyah al-Machfudz

1. The residence of Nya Dzuhriyah
2. The office of Pondok putri
3. The residence of Nyai Abidah
4. The residence of Gus sholah
5. Pondok Putri
6. The residence of Gus Abdul
7. The mosque of Seblak
8. An-Anwar building
9. Al-Hikmah building
10. The place for wudhu' (ablution)
11. An-Nur building
12. The grave of Kiai Machfudz Anwar
13. The grave of Pesantren Seblak family
14. An-Najah building
15. The office of Pesantren putra
16. The office of SMAI
17. The classroom of SMAI
18. The computer lab
19. The classrooms
20. Library
21. The language lab

- Pengasuh pesantren putri (the coordinator of the pesantren for girls): Nyai Mahshunah (the wife of Umar Faruq), Nur Laili Rahmah, Siti Nursa'adah, BA.
- The coordinator of Madrasah Salafiyah Syafiiyah was Umar Faruq (Bapak Faruq), who was in charge of the educational institution unit under the foundation of Khoiriyah Hasyim, ranging from kindergarten, to Madrasah Diniyah and Aliyah.
- The coordinator of the orphanage house was H. Lukman Hakim (Bapak Lukman).

When Bapak Faruq passed away in 2003, the leadership of the pesantren passed on to his siblings, wife and in-laws. Bapak Faruq's wife, Nyai Mahsunah's has a significant leadership position as a 'Nyai' for the female pupils. Nyai Jamilah's son and daughters, who reside locally, automatically took the managerial roles as well. They were involved in the instructional process, in line with their educational background. The recent arrangement of yayasan Khoiriyah Hasyim's committee after Bapak Faruq's period is:

Chairperson	Dr.H. Ali Faisal, Sp.A (m)
Co-chairperson	Dra Hj. Mahshunah (f) H. Asy'ary Sarbani, SH (m)
Secretary	H. Luqman Hakim, SH (m)
Co-secretary	H. Luthfi Sahal, Lc (m) Nur Hidayat, S.Ag (m)
Treasurer	Thariq Abdul Ghaffar (m)
Co-treasurer	Hj. Nur laili Rahmah, S.pd (f)

In the formal structure of the pesantren leadership, Ali Faisal is positioned as the chairperson, but in reality he does not reside locally in a pesantren complex nor maintain close contact with the pupils. Practically, the pesantren is managed collectively by Nyai Mahshunah, Lukman Hakim (and his wife) and Nur Laili Rahmah and her husband, Luthfi Sahal. Those people are directly engaged with the pesantren affairs on a day-to-day basis. They also reside locally and are able to fulfil their roles for the pesantren management and the pupils.

Pesantren Salafiyah Syafiiyah Seblak of Nyai Jamilah's family has the formal schooling system, which also separated the sexes, although these schools are located in the same complex. Male and female pupils are placed in separate classrooms. The pesantren also has an orphanage house, as part of its charitable contribution to society. The orphan pupils live separately from normal pupils. They are also exempt from the obligatory tuition fees. Outside the complex, there is a kindergarten, which was established in Nyai Khoiriyah's period to cater for the local children, and those little children are not lodged in the pesantren complex.

Centre for Pesantren and Democracy Studies (Cepdes)

The establishment of Cepdes also occurred within the framework of bringing the pesantren into a better stage of development. At the time I conducted the fieldwork in 2003, Cepdes had an office in the complex of Pesantren Salafiyah al-Machfudz. Cepdes was established by Kiai Machfudz Anwar and Nyai Abidah's daughter, Lily Zakiyah Munir⁴³ in 2002. Talking about the initial concept of Cepdes, Lily compared its basic idea of 'Islam transformative' to 'Islam Emansipatoris' of P3M (Perhimpunan Pengembangan Pesantren dan Masyarakat, the Centre for the pesantren and Community Development).

At the time P3M had a program called "Islam Emansipatoris", Emancipatory Islam, which is directed towards deconstructing the religious interpretations, based on realistic experience, and this is close to Cepdes's program of what we called "Islam Transformative". Transformative Islam began from the method of understanding the religion, Quran and hadits, not in a normative way but based on reality, through the discussions called bahsul masail.⁴⁴

As an organisation, Cepdes outlined several programs, mostly targeting pesantrens and their community. Some of Cepdes programs were:

- 1 Strengthening the capacity of the community.
 - providing English courses for both pupils and staff
 - developing budaya baca (a culture of reading) among the pupils and society.
- 2 Developing democracy and civil society
 - Developing visionary leadership for leaders within the framework of local autonomy.
 - Gender justice and equality.
 - Establishing a school of politics for women.
- 3 Workshops and Research
 - Bahsul Masail under the topic of Political Rights of Muslim women.
 - Publishing a bulletin on the topic of transformative Islam.

Apparently, gender issues is one of the priorities in Cepdes programs. This fact cannot be separated from the figure of Lily Zakiyah Munir herself, who is also known as an expert on gender and Islam. She has been invited to speak on this topic in different national as well as international seminars, conferences and workshops. Her article entitled, "He is your garment and you are his... (sic): religious precepts, interpretations, and power relations in marital sexuality among Javanese Muslim women", was published by Sojourn (Journal of Social Issues in Southeast Asia), October 2002, and "Islam, Gender and Equal Rights for Women", was published by Indonesian English newspaper the Jakarta Post, Tuesday, December 10, 2002. In addition, she has also presented several papers on this topic for both national and international conferences. When I interviewed her in July 2003, she had just come back from a conference in Chile, namely “Dialogos Sur-Sur, Planning the South-South Dialogue between Indonesia and the Andean Region and Southern Cone: Religion, Gender, Sexual and Reproductive Health and Rights”, June 23-27, 2003, in Santiago. In this conference, she presented her topic of gender and Islam by stressing the Islamic perspectives of maslahat or maqasid al-shari’a (the aims of the sharia). In the interview, Lily also stated that she was to conduct a workshop on Muslim women and political participation in the perspectives of fiqh (Islamic jurisprudence). As an organisation which is concerned with Islam and contemporary issues, Cepdes has a particular program to discuss different issues of contemporary Islam within a pesantren tradition, namely bahsul masail.⁴⁵

Lily Zakiyah Munir was assisted by a committee.⁴⁶ As listed above, the main idea of Cepdes was to promote the idea of ‘transformative Islam’ through a variety of programs and projects. Obviously, some people who work for Cepdes have pesantren backgrounds. It seems that the issues they try to promote go far beyond just pesantren issues per se. However, the pesantren is still viewed as a significant agent. Cepdes aims to develop the pesantren as the centre for democracy and civil society. It published a bulletin, namely al-Hanif, with the motto of “menjembantani tradisi dan modernitas” (to bridge between tradition and modernity). Cepdes is aware of the essence of tradition in its structure, which is represented by the pesantren institution, and modernity represented by the programs on socialising democracy and other contemporary socio-political issues of democracy, gender, civil society and so forth.

I made several visits to the Cepdes office during my fieldwork in Jombang, which was located within the compound of Pesantren Salafiyah al-Machfudz. I read some literature from the Cepdes library. The collections consisted of books and publications in Indonesian, Arabic and English. The library has a significant number of English books on the contemporary issues of democracy, civil society and gender discourse. The books on women and Islam include Believing Women in Islam: Unreading Patriarchal Interpretations of the Quran, by Asma Barlas, Beyond the Veil: Male-Female Dynamics in Modern Muslim Society, by Fatima Mernissi, Women and Gender in Islam: Historical Roots of a Modern Debate, by Laila Ahmed. The library also has collections of local and national newspapers, magazines on women, health and other issues, also a fiction section.

Within the framework of its program, Cepdes arranged some workshops or seminars, for instance there was a workshop on the topic of “Pesantren, Terrorism and Radicalism” on October 16, 2003. The speakers came from local, national as well as international backgrounds. This activity showed that Cepdes has also been recognised by national and international participants. It was not the first time that Cepdes invited international speakers to its workshop. On February 14-15, 2003, Cepdes held a workshop on 'visionary leadership' for the village leaders, which was attended by the counsellor of public affairs from the American embassy and a Japanese researcher, Dr. Yasuko Kobayashi, who shared his ideas on democracy in Japan. The existence of Cepdes was also sponsored by the Tifa Foundation, the Ford Foundation, UNDP, Emory University, Atlanta, and the public affairs section of the American embassy in Jakarta. Currently, Cepdes has several offices, not only in Jombang but also in Jakarta. The original office located within the complex of Pesantren Seblak was also transferred to a proper location of its own in Jombang.

The case of Cepdes signifies another model of women's engagement in serving the pesantren and the community. Lily Zakiyah Munir as a female immediate family member of the kiai played a role in informal pesantren affairs through her NGO. She was not positioned in the formal structure of the pesantren leadership like her mother, nevertheless her efforts had a significant impact on the development of the pesantren itself. In the interview, Nyai Abidah also recognised that her daughter, Lily Zakiyah Munir, has a role in sharing ideas and in seeking financial assistance for the development of the pesantren. The next chapter will touch specifically upon the public roles of Nyai in the pesantren and community-related matters.

4 Nyais of Jombang Pesantrens

Public Roles and Agency¹

Biographical Sketch of the Nyais

From the main case study of Pesantren Seblak, I have chosen three nyais from three different generations; starting with Nyai Khoiriyah (the first generation), Nyai Abidah (the second generation) and Nyai Mahshunah (the third generation). Nyai Khoiriyah and her husband founded the pesantren. Nyai Abidah is Nyai Khoiriyah's daughter, while Nyai Mahshunah came from Pesantren Darul Ulum and married the grandson of Nyai Khoiriyah and moved to Pesantren Seblak. These facts suggest that nyais, either in their pesantren of origin or their 'adopted pesantren', have similar opportunities to be as influential as their male counterparts, particularly if they have leadership skills, management abilities and relevant religious knowledge.

Nyai Khoiriyah

Nyai Khoiriyah was born in 1906. She was the second child from the marriage of Kiai Hasyim Asy'ary to Nyai Nafiqah. Both her parents were believed to be the descendants of a sixteenth-century Javanese king, namely Brawijaya.² She grew up in a period when there was no extensive public education, either religious or secular, available for women, despite some limited basic schools that were founded by the Dutch as part of their ethical policy³ for the native people, or some limited educational access in Western Dutch education that was also offered to the children of upper-class, aristocratic Javanese background, including the daughters.⁴ Those Dutch schools were not very popular and were not 'accepted' among the pesantren or santri community. This is due to pesantren antipathy to the Dutch colonial powers in Indonesia. Since there was no pesantren education for girls, then some kiais taught their daughters at home at that time.⁵

Little Khoiriyah had a private education on Islamic sciences from her father, Kiai Hasyim Asy'ary. The pesantren world has a principle under which women and men should not intermingle; Khoiriyah was educated by her father using this principle. Kiai Hasyim Asy'ary did not place his daughter in his halaqah (a group of students which resembles a class) or allow her to mix with his male students. In his short article on Nyai Khoiriyah, Zuhdy mentioned that Nyai Khoiriyah followed the lessons from her father where she sat behind a curtain so that she did not intermingle with her male counterparts.⁶ Her destiny to be the daughter of an elite religious leader bestowed on her some particular privileges, including the opportunity to be educated in specific knowledge of Islamic sciences, knowledge which was generally unavailable for women in her time.

As a member of the core family of the kiai, she was also supposed to follow the practice of endogamous marriage to maintain the strong network of the pesantren, extending as well as sustaining the pesantren tradition. When she was about thirteen years old, she was married to a learned student of her father, Maksum Ali from the family of Pesantren Maskunambang Gresik.⁷ After the marriage, her father, Kiai Hasyim Asy'ary, suggested that the couple establish a new pesantren. It is quite common for a descendant of a kiai to either lead the existing pesantren or establish a 'new' pesantren. As a result, Pesantren Seblak was founded in 1921, located about 200 metres from her father's Pesantren Tebuireng. At the very beginning, all the pupils were male, some of them were indeed the pupils of Pesantren Tebuireng. Kiai Maksum Ali was recorded as the first leader of Pesantren Seblak. When Kiai Maksum Ali passed away in 1933, Nyai Khoiriyah took over the leadership of the pesantren.

As mentioned in the previous chapter, the early twentieth century was when several schools were founded, including ones for girls. This phenomenon occurred not only in Indonesia, but also in Europe as education for the masses became more prevalent. In Indonesia women began entering the public schooling either as pupils, teacher, leader, or even founders of those girls schools, as in the case of Rahmah al-Yunusiyah for Diniyah Putri school, Nyai Ahmad Dahlan for Muallimat school, and Nyai Nurkhodijah for pesantren for girls of Denanyar. What made Nyai Khoiriyah's engagement in the leadership of the pesantren different was that she was the leader of a pesantren that also had male pupils. She was the leader over the staff, including the male staff of the pesantren.⁸

Nyai Khoriyah assumed the leadership of the pesantren for approximately five years, until 1938. As a consequence of her second marriage to an Indonesian ulama, who lived in Mecca, Kiai Muhaimin⁹, Nyai Khoriyah left for Mecca. Travelling to Mecca was commonly undertaken by santri and devout members of the Muslim community from the archipelago. The main aim for their journey to Mecca was to make a pilgrimage, but some also stayed for educational purposes.¹⁰ This practice continued until the early twentieth century.¹¹

The chance to live in Mecca and to learn and study there is a dream of the majority of pesantren people in the archipelago, as the knowledge gained gives them more religious credibility. Mecca is considered the ‘sumber ngelmu’ (the source of knowledge).¹² If the journey to Mecca was understood by the santri community as a place for making a pilgrimage, Mecca was also the centre for creating a well-versed and learned ulama. However, there was no record of women scholars in Mecca among the Archipelago pilgrim network from the seventeenth century until the beginning of the twentieth century. Similarly, there is almost no data or record of a woman from pesantren background who spent any amount of time in a Mecca halaqah and became a learned ulama upon her return to the Archipelago. It was clear that some women from pesantren background or kiai’s family travelled to Mecca; most of them only for the purpose of the pilgrimage, or to accompany their husbands as in the case of the first wife of Kiai Hasyim Asy’ary from Pesantren Siwalan Panji Sidoarjo, or Nyai Nurkhodijah, who made a pilgrimage to Mecca with her brother before she married Kiai Bisri Syansury. In Khoiriyah’s case, however, as someone who had already been equipped to a particular degree in Islamic scholarship from the opportunity to learn from her father, it seemed that she also found the opportunity to learn eagerly while staying in Mecca. Nyai Khoiriyah lived for nineteen years in Mecca from 1938-1957. There is no documentation on how Nyai Khoiriyah studied in Mecca. Did she participate in the halaqah (Islamic learning circle) which was held in al-Haram Mosque of Mecca together with her male counterparts? Or did she learn in one of the halaqahs with her female counterparts in Mecca, since the segregation of men and women was strictly applied? Her adopted son said in an interview: “It was clear that Ibu (Nyai Khoiriyah) was also learning in Mecca, but technically how – whether she attended halaqah with other male attendants or not – I have no idea.”¹³

Moreover, all my interviewees believed that Nyai Khoiriyah pioneered the establishment of a school for girls in Mecca, namely Madrasah Banat. They also believed this school was one of the first girls’ schools in Mecca. The school is related to the history of a school for young men in Mecca. In 1927, Sayid Muchsin Musana from Palembang founded Madrasah Darul Ulum in Mecca. Some people from the archipelago who lived in Mecca objected to Sayid Muchsin Musana, so the leadership of the school was passed on to Syeikh Yasin al-Fadany. After Syeikh Yasin’s period, the director of the madrasah was Kiai Muhaimin (Nyai Khoiriyah’s husband). There had been discussions about establishing a school for girls since the early years of Madrasah Darul Ulum, but it was not until 1942 that Nyai Khoiriyah actually opened one. It was supported by Syeikh Yasin al-Fadany himself. Structurally, the Madrasah Banat was part of the Madrasah Darul Ulum, but it existed separately to provide Islamic education to girls. To confirm Nyai Khoiriyah's engagement in the education and learning/instruction in Mecca, her adopted son said, "Nyai Khoiriyah gave me a watch, and it was a gift from the parents after the graduation of their children".¹⁴ Nevertheless, in this study, I have not had the capacity to trace back to her period in Mecca or find out how the history in Mecca recorded her contribution to the establishment of the Madrasah Banat. In this regard, my focus is more on how a woman is recognised as a pioneer and was seen as being capable of a significant contribution in the public space by her people within a male-dominated society.

In 1957, Nyai Khoiriyah returned to Indonesia and began to be involved in a wider range of public religious roles. She returned to Indonesia first of all because her husband, Kiai Muhaimin, passed away at the end of 1956. Another reason was the suggestion of Sukarno, the first Indonesian president, whom she met in Mecca; he invited her to return to Indonesia to contribute to the development of Indonesia. Within the Javanese and pesantren tradition, there was a strong tendency to give more respect to an ulama who had just returned from Mecca and who was seen to be able to bestow a barakah (a bounty of grace) on those who came to study. Having 'graduated' from Mecca, as the centre of Islamic learning, gave an ulama particular religious status and authority. According to Aboebakar,¹⁵ a religious teacher who did not live and learn in Mecca was just like a teacher who did not have a certificate, although s/he might have a big pesantren and hundreds of students. The ulama would be visited by a number of local people for the barakah, and the parents would be highly motivated to send their children to learn from the ulama.

Nyai Khoiriyah: an Ulama Perempuan (Female Ulama)

Regardless of how she studied, the fact is that upon her return to Indonesia, her ability in Islamic sciences was comparable to other well-known [male] ulamas. Aboebakar in his description of Kiai Hasyim Asy'ary's family, described Khoiriyah as "... ulama wanita yang tidak alang kepalang mendalam ilmunya tentang Islam" (a female ulama with highly outstanding capabilities in Islamic learning).¹⁶ As a daughter of the celebrated ulama, it seems that Khoiriyah also inherited the capacity to attain the high level of her father's knowledge in the Islamic sciences. In this regard, Dhofier made a pertinent comment, saying that "... [S]ome kiais taught their daughter themselves on the high level of Islamic classical text-books. Nyai Khoiriyah, the daughter of Kiai Hasyim Asy'ary, for instance, had a very deep understanding of the branches of Islamic sciences..."¹⁷

The level of Khoiriyah's understanding of the different branches of Islamic sciences was outstanding. She mastered a number of kitab kunings, including the advanced level of those Islamic classical textbooks.¹⁸ Several religious figures of other pesantrens in Jombang also confirmed her outstanding capacity in the Islamic sciences. During my interview with him, Kiai Yusuf Hasyim, the director of Pesantren Tebuireng, also recognized Nyai Khoiriyah's intellectual capacity in the Islamic sciences. He attributed the title 'kiai putri' (female kiai) to Nyai Khoiriyah.¹⁹ Another leader of the local pesantren in the area confirmed Nyai Khoiriyah's capability. One of her students who used to accompany her in her activities also said that Nyai Khoiriyah was brave enough to express her opinion even if it opposed those of the men in a bahsul masail attended by the well-known kiai or ulama: "Who dares to oppose the opinions of the kiai sepuh [senior kiai] in bahsul masail? But Mbah Khoiriyah was brave enough to do that. She referred to the classical kitab kuning to support her opinion, having equal mastery of the kitab kuning as those kiai did."²⁰ Ulamas in Islam also have a religious authority for generating fatwas. For the NU community, the fatwa is a product of a bahsul masail or meeting of learned religious leaders/ulamas. As mentioned above, Nyai Khoiriyah was one of the participants in the bahsul masail among the ulamas/kiais of Jombang.

A staff member who worked during Nyai Khoiriyah's leadership of Pesantren Salafiyah Seblak said, "Nyai Khoiriyah tested some male teachers on their fluency in reciting the Qur'an to determine if they were eligible to be the imam of the communal prayers".²¹ One of her pupils told me, "I still remember when Mbah Khoiriyah examined the recitation of sura al-Fatihah. Several male teachers of Pesantren Salafiyah Seblak were tested, but only a few of them passed this examination".²² This fact is quite interesting, considering that the mainstream opinion in the fiqh (Islamic jurisprudence) states that a woman is not allowed to be an imam for the communal prayer if there are any male participants. From the fiqh mainstream point of view, Nyai Khoiriyah was not eligible to be an imam for the Friday communal prayers, for instance, but the male staff members or teachers of her pesantren were eligible. Nevertheless, it was Nyai Khoiriyah who examined the staff of the Pesantren Seblak regarding their qualifications for being an imam for those communal prayers. In Nyai Khoiriyah's case, it is almost impossible to maintain that the label of ulama is only exclusively attached to male scholars. Evidently, some women earned the title as well. All of the above data strongly supports the recognition of her capacity as an ulama, regardless of the fact that the mainstream within Muslim communities still presumes that an ulama is a male scholar. Sayyid Marsot states in his book, Men and Women in Eighteenth Century Egypt, that an ulama is basically a learned man who interprets the Quranic verses and other Islamic teachings. There were some women who were learned, but they “do not acquire the status and degree of authority of an alim [male ulama]”.²³ In the Indonesian context, the term ulama perempuan has been used since 1980 in the journal of Mimbar Ulama published by Majelis Ulama Indonesia (Indonesian Ulama Council). Nevertheless, the term ulama in the Mimbar Ulama was ‘reduced’ to the category of female religious preacher (muballighah) per se.

At the beginning of the twenty-first century, there was no written publication about her, apart from an unpublished bachelor’s thesis from the Institut Agama Islam Negeri (The State Institute for Islamic Studies) Surabaya, plus a brief article written by her adopted son published in Pesantren Tebuireng’s magazine. This was despite the fact that she was such a highly qualified female religious figure as an ulama, notably within the NU circle and the pesantren community. Even the book entitled Ulama Perempuan Indonesia (Indonesian Women Ulama) edited by Jajat Burhanuddin and published by Pustaka Gramedia Utama in 2002, a compilation of several biographical stories of prominent Indonesian female figures within the Islamic context, did not include her in its chapters, although she properly deserved the title of ulama herself. In this regard, Sinta Nuriyah, the director of the NGO PUAN Amal Hayati, criticized the standards used to determine the degree of ‘keulamaan’, ‘ulama-ness’, as she believed there are some female figures who deserve the title of ulama but were excluded from the book, whilst some figures with lesser qualifications were included in the book. Nuriyah said: “As far as I know, the real female ulama is Mbah Khoiriyah from Seblak, Mas Rahman’s²⁴ auntie.”²⁵

In this regard, Azyumardi Azra has commented on the scarce resources that have been written on ulamas in biographical dictionaries (tarajim), particularly on female ulamas, both in Islamic societies in general and in the Indonesian Muslim community in particular. This is quite true; not only has no biographical dictionary on Indonesian female ulama been written, there is also a tendency among the community that labelling women with the title of ulama is quite uncommon. As Azra cited: ... [O]nce again, a lot of things that we do not know yet on Indonesian female ulama. And there are also a number of Indonesian female ulamas who are not uncovered yet.”²⁶ There may well be a number of women who deserve to be attributed as ulama, including Nyai Khoiriyah.

Nyai Khoiriyah’s Educational Leadership

Among the pesantren leadership, she was the pengasuh (leader). The position as a pesantren leader is a tribute to her charisma, and invites respect from others. She had several male staff members and teachers under her leadership. During her leadership period, she initiated specific educational programs such as the establishment of a kindergarten for the local people. With regard to her position as a leader of Pesantren Seblak, she assumed the position in two different periods. The first period commenced in 1933 when her husband passed away, and lasted until 1938 when she left for Mecca, and this was the period before independence in Indonesia. The second period began in 1957 when she returned from Mecca, and lasted until late 1968, when she decided to retire from her role as pesantren leader; this was during the Sukarno period. In the first period of her leadership, the pesantren only had male students, whereas during the latter period of her leadership some female students were admitted to the pesantren, a tendency that started in 1939 under her daughter and son-in-law's leadership. Nyai Khoiriyah only taught the female students of the pesantren. One of the graduates of Pesantren Seblak under Nyai Khoiriyah's leadership said that the alumni of Pesantren Seblak "banyak yang menjadi 'orang'" which meant that a lot of them became significant figures. This is due to Nyai Khoiriyah's strong effort in developing and making significant improvements within the pesantren. She was known as someone who was disciplined, learned and religious.

In the period during which she became the leader of the pesantren, it was still quite rare to have a female in the top educational leadership position, let alone for a pesantren that had male pupils. However, in the second period of her leadership after Independence in 1945, the revolution era and guided democracy period of the 1950s, some women were given access to public roles and positions including educational leadership. Nevertheless, within the pesantren tradition, a priority for men to take over the pesantren leadership still reigned until the end of the twentieth century. Therefore, putting her leadership within the context of the pesantren tradition, her engagement as academic manager of the pesantren both in the first and in the second period is quite important in indicating her significant public roles in the religious educational leadership of the pesantren institution.

Nyai Khoiriyah: Socio-Religious Activities

As part of the NU community, Nyai Khoiriyah also participated in the structural leadership of the NU organisation, particularly in the Muslimat NU organisation. She was appointed twice (from 1959-1962 and 1967-1979) as the adviser for the national level of the Muslimat NU organization. This position is similar to that of the Badan Syuriah PBNU (Supreme Religious Council of Nahdlatul Ulama) that consisted of senior kiais. Nyai Khoiriyah²⁷ herself was also appointed as a member of that Badan Syuriah PBNU²⁸ during the 1960s, which was dominated by senior kiais. No other woman was appointed as member of Badan Syuriah PBNU again within the next generation of NU women, nor indeed in the twentieth century. Alternatively through the women's wing organisations, some female pesantren figures obtained access to national political positions, including parliamentary seats. It seems that Nyai Khoiriyah decided not to be engaged in such political roles and positions, and concentrated primarily on the religious and educational fields.

For the local people, Nyai Khoiriyah was an active figure. She was invited to a great number of local majelis taklims (Islamic learning councils). One of her granddaughters said: "Mbah Khoiriyah had a special becak (pedicab) and a special chauffeur to take her to different places where she was invited to give a speech."²⁹ One of her students at Pesantren Seblak said:

Mbah Khoiriyah was a smart, disciplined and active woman. Every Friday, she had several socio-religious activities and was invited to the majelis taklim. Sometimes she was invited to five different majelis taklim at the same time. When this happened, she would go to one majelis taklim and direct her students to go to the others. All of those students had a becak [pedicab] prepared by Mbah Khoiriyah for their transportation, should this occur.³⁰

Apart from her activities to deliver sermons in several religious gathering or majelis taklim, she also wrote her thoughts and published her works. Within the years in which oral tradition was more recognized, this was not common among NU leaders, let alone a woman. One of her articles was on the understanding of Islamic schools (mazhab) and tolerance.³¹

The strong legitimacy that buttressed her in that position was not only her blood relationship to the figure of Kiai Hasyim Asy'ary, it was also supported by her own potential and capacities. Not all of Kiai Hasyim Asy'ary's daughters demonstrated similar achievements. Her capacity in understanding the Islamic sciences and the fact that she resided in Mecca as the centre of Islamic learning for so many years had already given her a strong basis for respect by the community for her public roles. The 'blue-blood legitimacy' as a member of a kiai's kinship network in which nyais achieve specific ascribed 'power'³² provided significant privileges. However, these privileges are not adequate for negotiating significant public roles or for making their existence in the public sphere more recognisable if not accompanied by relevant capabilities. She further 'negotiated' the possibility for public roles apart from the ascribed public access inherent in the process of ibuisim and priyayization. Such a pattern is also to be found in other nyai stories in the next generation of Pesantren Seblak and other pesantrens as well.

Nyai Abidah (Bu Abidah)

Nyai Abidah was born in 1924. She was the first surviving daughter of Nyai Khoiriyah from her marriage to Kiai Maksum Ali. Like her mother, Nyai Abidah was also an active female figure. One of my informants said she resembles ‘Ibu Kartini dari Jombang’ (Ms. Kartini from Jombang). Nyai Abidah was also engaged intensively in the project of providing educational opportunities for girls in pesantrens and the NU circle in Jombang, particularly through her involvement in the early establishment of pesantren for girls in Seblak. Her significant contribution in the early history of Pendidikan Guru Agama NU Putri (PGA NU Putri, NU Female Religious Teacher Training College) in Jombang and her leadership of Pesantren Seblak added to her reputation. In her further public roles, as a member of parliament and a judge in Jombang’s religious court, she also represented the idea of women’s emancipation. Her seniority among other nyais in the area has made her a respected person within the pesantren and beyond.

Young Abidah attended no formal schooling. She learned from her mother (Nyai Khoiriyah), grandfather (Kiai Hasyim Asy’ary) and her uncle (Wahid Hasyim). All of them were among the celebrated and learned religious figures from the pesantren and NU community. Wahid Hasyim invited her to his residence to accompany his wife, Nyai Solichah, who was in the same situation; trying to learn the Arabic script. Nyai Abidah was chosen to accompany Solichah (from Pesantren Denanyar), who had just become a member of the Tebuireng family after her marriage to Wahid Hasyim. Wahid Hasyim was one of Nyai Abidah’s masters and a person who encouraged her and provided her with access to teach the girl students in Pesantren Seblak and in the Female Religious Teacher Training College in Jombang.

Nyai Abidah as Manager and Educational Leader

In Abidah’s time, there were some schools and informal pesantren education programs available for women, particularly in Pesantren Denanyar, although Nyai Abidah was not educated there. Nevertheless, according to Nyai Abidah, there was some opposition towards the idea of providing education for women. She said: “[T]here were still some people who had a conservative view of the idea of education for women. To them, “women are not allowed to learn, it is haram [religiously forbidden]”. Her mother expected her to have a better education in order to continue her dreams of serving the pesantren and community.³³ “Mbah Khoiriyah [Nyai Khoiriyah] said, it is useless to have children if we cannot derive a benefit from them. If you don’t believe me that women should also pursue education, come and ask Mbah Hasyim [Kiai Hasyim Asy’ary] about it”.³⁴ According to Nyai Abidah, her mother placed a responsibility on her shoulders to take care of pesantren affairs. "You are my eldest daughter,"³⁵ Nyai Khoiriyah said to Nyai Abidah, reminding her of the continual [inherited] responsibility for pesantren leadership. The above statement of Nyai Khoiriyah conveys a very clear message, that as a daughter of a pesantren leader, she had to be prepared to take over the duties of managing and developing the pesantren. Her position as a member of a kiai family came inherently with the duty as well. She herself was also a wife of a kiai, as the result of endogamous marriage. In fulfilling her duty as the first female instructor for the female students of Pesantren Seblak, Nyai Abidah realised that she was fortunate to have a husband like Kiai Machfudz Anwar.³⁶ He helped her in preparing the lessons for her students. He was a graduate of Pesantren Tebuireng and was one of the instructors there, too. He was learned in the Islamic sciences, and he had also mastered a variety of Islamic knowledge, particularly the ilm al-falaq sort of Islamic astronomy to identify the start and the end of Ramadan and the coming of Idul Fitri. Nyai Abidah claimed she couldn't write in the Arabic script and was only literate in the Malay script. Most lessons in the pesantren were written in the Arabic script.

"I said to my husband, 'Bapak, could you please help me? After breakfast, before you go out to teach in Pesantren Tebuireng, could you please write something on the blackboard for me?' 'What should I write?' Kiai Machfudz asked me. 'Please write what I would like to teach for today'."³⁷

This happened in her first experience of being an instructor for the female students in Pesantren Seblak. Nyai Abidah mentions that her husband prepared three written blackboards for her before conducting her instructional duties. She simply changed from one to another written blackboard for each session of her instruction. Apart from her husband, Nyai Abidah also learned from her uncle, Wahid Hasyim. Wahid Hasyim encouraged her to teach the female students in Pesantren Salafiyah Seblak and in the Pendidikan Guru Agama (PGA, Islamic Teacher Training College) at Jombang. The first cohort of girl students of Pesantren Salafiyah Seblak was far bigger than predicted. A great number of girls from different ages turned up at the pesantren to learn. Nyai Abidah had to consult with Wahid Hasyim to work out how and what should be taught. The PGA in Jombang was also part of Wahid Hasyim's efforts to establish a public school for girls in the area. Once again, Nyai Abidah was his choice to manage the school. The PGA prepared the teachers for the elementary and secondary levels of Islamic schools. Nyai Abidah said, "To teach the PGA students is more difficult, so I asked Pak Wahid what I should do. Pak Wahid said, 'You have to teach, this is wajib [obligatory]’.”³⁸ Nyai Abidah was a person who was entrusted by Wahid Hasyim to support his idea of expanding formal education for women.

In her instructional duties afterwards, Nyai Abidah not only taught the female students per se, she was an instructor for male students as well, even though it was a pesantren tradition that a woman was not allowed to teach male students/classes. One student said, “I attended a class taught by Nyai Abidah on Islamic theology, using kitab Jawahir al-Kalamiyah as a text. The students were both male and female.”³⁹ During my fieldwork (1989-2003), I discovered that very few nyai ever instructed classes of male students; the majority exclusively teach female pupils.

Apart from her instructional duties, she was also co-leader of the pesantren with her husband, Kiai Machfudz Anwar. Several years after Nyai Khoiriyah passed away in 1982, Nyai Abidah and her husband, returned to manage Pesantren Seblak in a joint leadership until Kiai Machfudz Anwar passed away in 1989; since then Nyai Abidah has been the sole director of the pesantren. During my research in Jombang, apart from Nyai Abidah there were two other children of Nyai Abidah and Kiai Machfudz Anwar who assumed the leadership of the pesantren temporarily, namely Hamnah and Abdul Hakim. Nevertheless, in reality, within the period of 1989-2003, Nyai Abidah primarily assumed the leadership of the pesantren. In 2000-2001, she withdrew from teaching the students in the pesantren and also from her instructional roles in the majelis taklim for local women, but she was still in the position as a leader of the pesantren two years later. Among other nyai in the area, Nyai Abidah is known as nyai sepuh, which literally means an elderly nyai. In the NU community the kiai and nyai sepuh are more respected because their age indicates knowledge, maturity, wisdom and experience. Armed with these qualities, Nyai Abidah is regarded with the utmost respect by the pesantren and local society.

Nyai Abidah: Public Positions beyond Pesantren Boundaries

Thanks to her involvement in the Muslimat NU organisation that was established in 1946, Nyai Abidah had the opportunity to be engaged in significant political activities, particularly as a member of the early national parliament, namely Konstituante, which was founded as a result of the general election in 1955.

The opportunity for Nyai Abidah to participate in public socio-political roles stems from the micro-culture of the family, “... although a woman is active, if she is not supported by her husband it doesn't work.”⁴⁰ Lily Zakiyah Munir also described how her father voluntarily offered to look after their children when Nyai Abidah felt reluctant to be in that position because she had several little children.

When my mother became a member of the Constituent Assembly in 1959, her children were very young. My mother had eleven children with two- or three-year intervals between them. Regarding her status as a member of DPRD and the Constituent Assembly, she wanted to say that her children were very young, but then her husband Pak Kiai Machfudz Anwar said, 'Just leave the children with me, why can't you trust that I am also able to look after them.'⁴¹

At this stage as well, her career was not exclusively dealing with pesantren matters, for she was much more heavily engaged in political activities. Being a mother of eleven children with several public appointments, it did not seem to be easy for her to keep a balance between her domestic and public duties. According to her daughter, Lily Zakiyah Munir, Nyai Abidah dutifully represented the presence of Muslim women in the public space.

Nyai Abidah was actively involved in Muslimat Nahdlatul Ulama organisation. She was also a member of the local House of Representatives in Jombang in 1951. I just want to say, the stereotype that Muslim women are merely attached to the domestic sphere is not completely correct. I was a baby at that time, during which time my mother would ... travel the eight kilometres from Seblak to Jombang. If there was a meeting, she still took me with her, because there was no baby formula at that time. She would take me to ibu rodho, a wet nurse, and I was breastfed there. This was part of her struggle.⁴²

Moreover, she entered a judicial or legal system when she was appointed as the religious judge at the pengadilan agama (religious court) of Jombang in two different periods; from 1960-1964 and 1965-1968. In fact, within the Islamic jurisprudence discourse, it is still debatable whether a woman is allowed to be a judge or not, and this discourse also took place in the pesantren world. The fact that Indonesia has some female religious judges does not mean that all Muslim society can easily accept the existence of female religious judges. To some extent the realities and the discourse are incompatible. Although the Minister of Religious Affairs from the NU and a pesantren background created a policy that made it possible for women to attend the Sekolah Hakim Agama Negeri (National Religious Law School), some discourses within the NU and pesantren communities are still hesitant about the appropriateness of female religious judges, and whether their stand can be legitimated from the Islamic point of view. One of the stories that I traced in this regard is from the *bahsul masalah*⁴³ column Tebuireng

Magazine in 1986, relating to the question “Is it allowed for a woman to be a religious judge?” The answer was that only one out of four major Sunni Islamic schools allowed for the possibility of female judges in Islamic jurisprudence. In the concluding remark, it is mentioned that the reason for supporting this argument is that a woman lacks rationality (naqis al-aql). Nyai Abidah was therefore a woman much ahead of her time in this respect as she rationally defied such expectations.

Nyai Abidah: Socio-Religious Activities

Nyai Abidah also managed a majelis taklim (Islamic learning council) for the local women in the Seblak mosque. One woman who used to participate in the majelis taklim said, “Sometimes while in the mosque, Nyai Abidah was reciting several chapters of the Quran at once. I just listened to her reading, for I could not recite that much like her in one time”. When Nyai Abidah retired from most of her teaching activities in 2000, she only attended the majelis taklim, as it was taken over by her son-in-law, Kiai Taufiqurrahman. One afternoon, I was visiting the pesantren and met up with Nyai Abidah when the majelis taklim was being held in Masjid Seblak. She was dressed in a kebaya and jarik (a traditional Javanese cloth) and covered her head with a jilbab (the veil). She was one of the participants of the ceremony, even although she had retired four years previously. On that day, Nyai Abidah was sitting in the terrace of Pesantren Seblak aula (seminar room). The local women were in the mosque performing the religious ritual before the sermon of the kiai. On the right side of the mosque, ibu-ibus were selling their goods for the majelis taklim attendee. A small group of bapak-bapaks (men) were also there in the ceremony, sitting at the terrace, which was not very far from Nyai Abidah. Although she was not actively engaged in the instruction of the majelis taklim, due to her age and for health reasons, her appearance signified her deep concern and strong support for the access of women to education.

In the official document of Kwaron village, she was recorded as being one of three religious leaders in the area (the other two were kiais).⁴⁴ Until 2003, Nyai Abidah was still the person to consult about different pesantren affairs. In the seminar held by Cepdes on the topic of ‘Pesantren, Terrorism and Radicalism’ on October 16, 2003, Nyai Abidah was the person who opened the seminar and gave the opening speech in front of the audience, consisting of both male and female participants. With a very clear voice and without a prepared text, she talked confidently in front of the public, including the foreign speakers. At the end of the workshop, she was invited to give a gift to those speakers, both local and international persons of note. She gave the gifts to both the male and female speakers, but she did not shake the male speakers’ hands. This is part of the Islamic tradition in which she believed that a Muslim woman should not shake hands with men except with those in the same *mahram*⁴⁵ categories. She came to the public space as a Muslim women with the 'Islamic' values, traditions and etiquettes that she believed and upheld.

Her initial involvement in public roles related to her activities in managing the first educational program for female students at Pesantren Seblak. Nyai Abidah's early involvement in the establishment of the pesantren for girls in Pesantren Seblak was a significant milestone, as she filled the gap of qualified female teachers to coordinate and teach the female students. Over time, her roles expanded beyond the pesantren boundaries to a broader public involvement in the socio-religious, political, and legal aspects of civil society. Her position as religious judge in the religious court of Jombang was quite unique, as it is very uncommon in the Muslim world to have a female religious judge at the religious court. Her roles and positions in the public space have proven that the public space within the pesantren and beyond is not an 'alien' space for women like her. Unlike her mother, she was not highly educated in the Islamic sciences or kitab kunings. Initially, she was only literate in the Malay script. However, her intention to learn and her determination to try something that was placed on her shoulders put her among the public figures who have made a significant contribution to the betterment of the pesantren and society. Her story is also one of the courage and determination of a woman who made a difference in her public roles despite the limitations attached to women within a pesantren tradition.

Nyai Mahshunah (Bu Sun)

Nyai Mahshunah is the granddaughter-in-law of Nyai Khoiriyah. She was born on December 29, 1952, in Jombang. She came from the family of Pesantren Darul Ulum Rejoso. The first formal education she attended, both elementary and secondary level, was the Islamic schools of Pesantren Darul Ulum. She finished senior high school in 1970. Apart from formal education, she also attended informal education in Pesantren Darul Ulum, which allowed her to learn kitab kunings or different branches of Islamic studies. She represented a new generation of nyais, for when she was growing up, there was wide access to public education for women.

Nyai Mahshunah: Educational and Organisational Background

Upon completion of senior high school in Pesantren Darul Ulum Rejoso, one of the four well-known pesantrens in Jombang, she asked her father for his consent to allow her to study for a tertiary education. For this purpose, she had to 'struggle' to obtain her father's consent, because her father opposed women pursuing a higher education, considering that it was unnecessary. Her struggle was successful. Finally, Nyai Mahshunah had the opportunity to study at the State Institute for Islamic Studies Sunan Kalijaga in Yogyakarta. She also fought for her father's consent to allow her siblings to undergo further education. "I also convinced my father who doubted his ability to support us financially for our [higher] education. I said to my father, the rezeki [the financial income] surely will be there because Allah, The Almighty is Beneficent and Merciful."⁴⁶ One of her younger brothers studied for 13 years in Germany, and one of her sisters married an American and lives in America with her family.

During her stay in Yogyakarta, the city known as kota pelajar (the city of students), she came into contact with different organisations, starting with Pergerakan Mahasiswa Islam Indonesia (PMII, Islamic Students Movement of Indonesia) in Yogyakarta, of which she was the chairperson for the period of 1974-1975. She was also a chairperson of Ikatan Pemuda Pelajar Nahdlatul Ulama (IPPNU, the NU Students Network) in Yogyakarta from 1975-1976. Her involvement in social and political organisations continued even after she completed her tertiary education in Yogyakarta.

Nyai Mahshunah: in Pesantren Leadership

During the last semesters of her study at the State Institute for Islamic Studies (IAIN), she was married to Mr. Faruq, the son of Nyai Jamilah, Nyai Khoiriyah's daughter. When she was expecting her first baby, she returned to Yogyakarta to complete her Bachelor's degree and defended her Bachelor's thesis. After completing her study, she was strongly encouraged by her mother-in-law, Nyai Jamilah (Nyai Abidah's sister) who was the director of Pesantren Seblak, to return to Seblak and become an instructor at the pesantren. After Nyai Jamilah passed away, her husband, Mr. Faruq, succeeded as the leader of the pesantren, and automatically Nyai Mahshunah become the 'Nyai' of the pesantren.

In her capacity as a 'Nyai' of the pesantren and also through her other activities, she always tried to maintain a balance between many competing demands. In the early morning she would lead her female students in subuh (early morning) communal prayers, then give an instruction on the kitab kuning. In the morning, before leaving for her office, she would be available for dealing with some pesantren affairs. As the nyai, she was also responsible for giving permission to the students who wanted to leave the complex for other activities, and she would be the top-level person to decide the problems emerging among the hundreds of female students.

Nyai Mahshunah: Political Activities

Nyai Mahshunah's political activities began during the New Order Suharto period of government. From 1990, amid her activities within the pesantren and NU women's wing organisation, Nyai Mahshunah began to get involved in the political arena. In 1999 she was appointed as the vice-chairperson of Dewan Perwakilan Rakyat Daerah (DPRD, Regional House of Representatives) Jombang from the Partai Persatuan Pembangunan (PPP, United Development Party).⁴⁷ From 1989-1992, she was also a chairperson for the Fatayat NU organisation in Jombang, and the vice-chairperson of the party board of Jombang from 1999 until the present, and the chairperson of the committee of Panitia Persatuan Pembangunan (the committee of united development) for the whole of the Surabaya regions from 1999 until 2003. Her involvement in the political party brought her into a political career in DPRD. She took up several positions such as the vice-chairperson of the Komisi C (a commission on development issues) of DPRD Jombang from 1997-1998; the vice-chairperson of Komisi A (a commission for governance issues) of DPRD Jombang from 1998-1999; the vice-chairperson of DPRD Jombang from 1999 until 2004, and she was also appointed to the regional Dewan Pendidikan (education board)⁴⁸ of Jombang for the period of 2004-2009. On her involvement in the DPRD, Nyai Mahshunah said:

I just want to prove that, as women, we are capable of being progressive ... because in the past women have been the victims of subordination. I used to tell my santriwati that, as women, you should be progressive, especially in terms of education, because it will give you your proper position in society.⁴⁹

In 2003 she was still in her position as the co-chairperson of the DPRD Jombang. This very important political position signified the bargaining position of her large political party. The positions of the chairperson and co-chairperson were chosen by the political parties, which attained the greatest number of public voters and had a number of members in parliament. Apart from her activities in DPRD, she carried out her duties in the pesantren. She was the imam (leading the prayers), especially the Subuh prayer. She was an instructor for religious matters. After early morning prayers once a month, she gave instruction in the majelis taklim (Islamic learning council) for local women, which was held in the pesantren. Her life was very full with these political, educational and religious engagements.

Nyai Mahshunah revealed that the opportunity and skills she developed and utilised in managing a lot of people within the pesantren gave her significant experience when it came to dealing with people from different backgrounds in her political position among the chairpersons of the DPRD. Beginning as someone who had been initially denied access to a tertiary education because she was a woman, Nyai Mahshunah has been involved in a wide range of public activities and engagements, both in the leadership of the pesantren and beyond. Her presence has particularly inspired the next generation of her students as well as her daughters,⁵⁰ who have ensured the pesantren has enjoyed an un-interrupted chain of female involvement in its leadership and management.

As the nyai of the pesantren, she was responsible for leading the female pupils in communal prayers. She was also the leader or manager of the pesantren, resolving any issues or problems relating to the pesantren or the students. Some Nyais had regular programs giving advice, mainly to female students, in addition of their instructional duties. Nyai Mahshuna said: "I try to be in touch with the students all the time. Apart from my political activities, I make time to be with the students, be an imam for their communal prayer and give the kuliah subuh [a brief sermon after the early morning prayer] for them every day to encourage them to study seriously."⁵¹

Theorising the Public Activities of the Nyais

First of all as wives of kiais or the daughter of a kiai, all of the nyais discussed above are 'ibu' or nyai for their pesantren. Their status as members of the kiai's immediate family gives them particular privileges within the pesantren tradition. Nevertheless, all of the nyais discussed above are the real 'Nyais' for their pesantren. In addition, the public roles in which they were engaged were also distinguished. If Nyai Khoiriyah tended to be more concentrated on the educational aspects and seemed to keep clear of the real political roles or activities, both Nyai Abidah and Nyai Mahshunah extended their public roles to the political arena when they became members of parliament. Nyai Abidah was one of the members of the konstituante. Nyai Mahshunah was an active participant in the political party, which finally placed her as the member of DPRD Jombang. Both Nyai Abidah and Nyai Mahshunah had no specific educational background in the political field, nevertheless their appointment as members of parliament or as one of the chief leaders of the political party suggests the public recognition of their qualifications for those positions.

The stimulus to have 30 per cent of women candidates for the house of representatives has opened up more space for pesantren women to be engaged, particularly through Partai Kebangkitan Bangsa (PKB) and Partai Persatuan Pembangunan (PPP). The participation of nyais or the women from pesantren backgrounds in the post-reformasi era (1998-2003) and the transition to democracy (2004-present) is quite significant, particularly in East Java. For instance, in the case of Jombang, all of the three women members in DPRD come from the pesantren background. Some began their engagement in Muslimat NU or Fatayat NU. The organisations like Muslimat or Fatayat NU are NU wings for their female members. When women become parliamentary candidates, they represent the main political party in the parliament, with similar authority and duties to those of their male counterparts.

Among the three generations, Nyai Khoiriyah did more in the sense of religious public roles than the two other women from the following generations. She was involved in the initial effort of establishing the school for girls in Mecca and was also a significant participant in the bahsul masail among other kiais and religious leaders. In addition, she was also a member of the majelis syuriah PBNU, an exclusive privilege that only happened once to the women of NU throughout the NU history. Due to her deep understanding of Islamic sciences, she was even appointed to positions that were not commonly available to women. Nyai Khoiriyah's daughter, Nyai Abidah, attained more varieties of public positions. In the political field, she was appointed as a member of the konstituante, in the national parliament during the Sukarno era. She represented the generation when the women of nationalist and religious organisations shifted from their struggle for national independence to the real political moves in post-colonial Indonesia. She was a religious judge and was also a leading figure of Muslimat NU, particularly of East Java province. The nyais like Nyai Abidah and Nyai Khoiriyah began their activities as pesantren leaders and instructors. As pesantren figures, those women could not be excluded from the nationalism movement, in which the religious organisations like Aisiyah and Muslimat NU also took part.⁵²

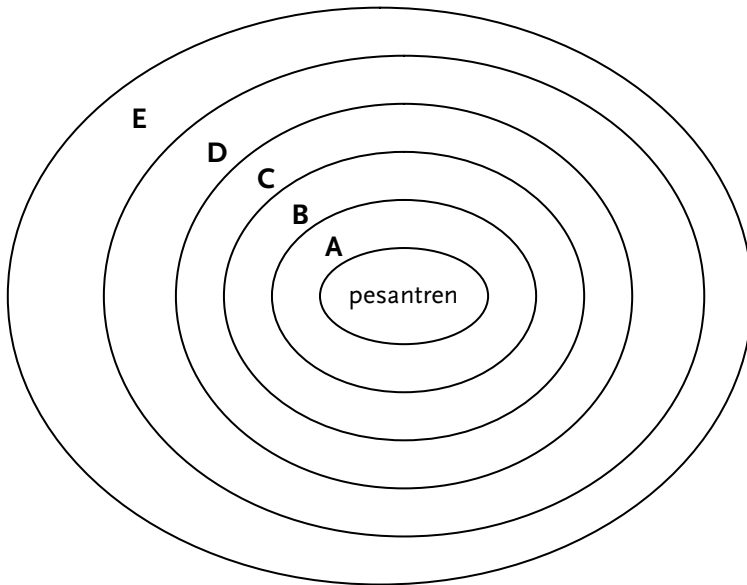

The figure of Nyai Mahshunah represents the younger pesantren generation. The wide access to public education affected her, and amidst

Figure 4.1 Categorisation of the nyai's public roles

	Educational leadership	Instructional process	Socio-religious organisations	Majelis taklim	Political field	Judicial field	Others
Nyai Koiriyah	◆	◆	◆	◆			bahsul masail
Nyai Abidah	◆	◆	◆	◆	◆	◆
Nyai Mahshunah	◆	◆	◆	◆	◆		Public educational board

the conservative views of her family on education for women, she was able to achieve a tertiary education degree. Nyai Mahshunah represented the period when a number of pesantren women were formally educated. Her position as a member of parliament was a result of the formal process she entered through her engagement initially with a particular political party. Thus, it was not only due to her membership of Fatayat or Muslimat NU.⁵³ She came with a specific sense of professionalism and a concentrated focus on the process for fulfilling her public position. Interestingly, for each of these women, their sense of social responsibility meant that they assumed and were given positions that might otherwise have been given to their husbands. The prominent role of these women is no longer seen as an aberration, but over the generations has been normalised to a certain extent. This then acts as an inspiration for greater public engagement by the young female students for whom they are responsible. Finally, from all of the general public roles of those nyais from Pesantren Seblak or beyond, the diagram below differentiates the degrees of the interconnections of their public roles to the pesantren.

Figure 4.2 Layers of nyais' activities

- A Pesantren leadership, management and instructional duties
- B Religious instruction for local people (majelis taklim)
- C Socio-religious organisation
- D Religious court
- E Political field

The first layers of A and B particularly indicate the closest public roles associated with the nyai's position as a pesantren female leader, as a member of the immediate family of a kiai. For that kind of activity, the power she has is mostly a derivative power from her male counterpart through the process of what is described as 'priyayization' (the process of upper classness) by Niewenhuis. Some exceptions occurred in this aspect, when those nyais were the sole director or a nyai sepuh or when their husband passed away, as in the case of Nyai Khoiriyah and Nyai Abidah. When Nyai Mahshunah's husband passed away in 2004, she was the most senior member in the collective leadership of the pesantren. The outer layers indicate the public positions earned which are not closely related to her position as a pesantren leader or kiai's family. This includes the positions earned by nyais through their engagement with organisations like Muslimat or Fatayat NU, and also their attachment to one political party, as in the case of Nyai Mahshunah, who was also the leader of the political party for her region. The power they had in this regard relied more on their performance and achievement, not simply a derivative power from their male counterparts, who were the kiai of the pesantrens. In the political and legal fields, they have achieved a power that is more than derivative power; their position is just like that of any other people achieving those positions.

Analysing those nyais' activities reflects the ambiguity or the fluidity of the public and private realms. The public roles a nyai played within the pesantren's domestic affairs were that of a manager for the pesantren household. Some nyais extended the boundaries of the private realms (a realm which also has a degree of publicness), as illustrated by the diagram, and entered the public space of the pesantren by being an educational leader or manager, which was then supplemented by other public positions beyond their pesantren or the community at large. It is important to establish here that if they dealt more intensively with their female counterparts within the public pesantren position or in the religious field such as the majelis taklim, then the position as a political leader, a member of bahsul masail, or a religious judge would bring them beyond the scope which only covered women or women's issues.

Although a pesantren will acknowledge that a kiai and his son are the recognised leaders inside and outside the pesantren, nevertheless a nyai with good qualifications will find it possible to negotiate her way into the pesantren public roles of leadership and management. According to Mas'udi, to have women in a leadership position within a male-dominated organisation requires some notable female figures to challenge the traditions, and this should be several influential women with good qualifications working together. If women's access to public education is increased, the chance of having women in leadership positions within pesantrens as well as society will always be possible.⁵⁴ The emergence of educated women from pesantrens or kiais' families will assist this process.

Between Public and Private Lives

From a different perspective, since the majority of Indonesian communities still live according to patriarchal values, with the assumption that women are particularly charged with undertaking domestic chores, it was not easy for those female figures to pursue their involvement in the public space. Beyond their public positions and activities, they are still viewed as women who by nature should be a good wife and mother. Those female figures of whom I have written were aware of this expectation, and all of them considered the need to be a good manager for their household activities. They were aware that fulfilling domestic duties is essential for them. The ability to move into the public sphere was only possible when they had shown an ability to manage the private domain successfully.

For those nyais, having a good arrangement for their domestic activities was one of the necessary conditions for their expansion into the public space. This is a significant issue that should be borne in mind in discussing the proper position of Muslim women in society. This issue cannot be adequately understood without knowing precisely how Muslim women perceive their status within a Muslim social order. This is one of the reasons why Muslim women may generally find it difficult to adopt a western model of feminism predicated on premises deemed universally applicable. Firstly, Muslim women do not necessarily perceive "family ties and kinship ties [as] a hindrance to women's 'liberation'."⁵⁵ The decision made by Nyai Mahshunah to get married while she was still a university student also suggests that she never considered that marriage would be a barrier to her dream of pursuing education. When she was seven months pregnant, she was able to finish her studies at the university. Being a mother and a wife did not mean all of their time was occupied in family matters, because they had help with their domestic duties, and keeping the balance between the two realms was always seen to be important.

In terms of the latter, Nyai Abidah said: "I'll try to go out for other activities after I am sure that I have done my duties at home. Therefore I prefer not to have outside activities in the early morning, because at that time, I still have to deal with my duties at home."⁵⁶ In the same vein, Nyai Mahshunah commented on her activities:

Regardless of my public activities, I still set aside time to manage the household, to make sure that everything is under control, to be with my children as much as I can and give directions to the maids who are in charge of preparing meals. I also make a commitment to attend only those ceremonies for which my presence is really needed, where no-one can replace me. But if my presence is not essential and my duties can be performed by others, I prefer not to go.⁵⁷

A well-managed domestic sphere provides a woman with the 'legitimacy' to negotiate access to public life with the significant males in her household. As such, women with religious, cultural and educational capital can aim to inhabit the public and private spheres at the same time. The question is: "Do they have a double burden?" The kiai household resembles the upper class or 'aristocrat' family. All of the kiai's households have several assistants for different jobs, and they come from different backgrounds – either their pupils, extended families or the local people. So these women are more like managers of the kiai household rather than workers in it. Mansurnoor's research on the kiai in Madura portrayed the nyai as a manager in the kiai household, having several people to assist her with domestic duties.⁵⁸ For lower-class women, their involvement in economic activities in the public sphere does not necessarily mean egalitarian gender relations: however, middle-class women who were involved in the public sector had fairer relations with their male counterparts. This is because they were involved in public life for aktualisasi diri (self-actualisation), not because of urgent economic needs. Also, middle-class women are more likely to have servants to carry out the domestic chores. This theory is relevant to the experiences of the nyai discussed above.

Supporting the Agency of Pesantren Women: Examining Kiai's Roles

The view of the kiai figure as a traditional, fanatical and inflexible person is problematic since in reality a number of kiais are quite flexible and open-minded.⁵⁹ In Khoiriyah's case, her father had an initial significant influence, as she had an early education from her father, who allowed her to 'attend' his classes, whereas most women in her time did not have such a rare opportunity. Nyai Abidah (80) said:

Mbah Hasyim [Kiai Hasyim Asy'ary] supported us to establish the pesantren putri in Seblak, otherwise we would not have been daring enough to do so, because at that time women were prohibited from having an education. Even some people said that it is forbidden (haram) for a woman to learn.⁶⁰

The opportunity for Nyai Abidah to be involved in socio-political roles in a public sphere also stems from the micro-culture of the family, especially the world view of the kiai: "... although a woman is active, if it is not supported by her husband, it doesn't work".⁶¹ Lily also described how her father voluntarily offered to look after their children when Nyai Abidah felt reluctance to take up her position because she had several little children occupying her time.

She believed that her father was a moderate kiai who had a more open-minded view on women's issues. Lily Zakiyah Munir herself did her Master's degree in Holland after completing her Bachelor's degree. "My elder sister studied at the medical faculty. The people made negative comments on her study, especially when she seemed to be independent during her study. They said, 'it is improper for a woman'."⁶²

For Nyai Mahshunah, the support she gained was also a result of a dialogue that she built up with her husband. Nyai Mahshunah's activities outside the household and pesantren consumed her time and energy. Initially, at one stage, she was challenged by her husband about her activities. She said to her husband:

... [S]ince the early beginning, I think I have asked your permission for my activities, but then when I got the public appointments as the consequence of my early activities, I should not be blamed for that. Do you think I would be better if I just stay at home and so... My husband said "no no, I don't mean that". Afterward, sometimes, my husband used to pick me up from my work. It was really nice.⁶³

In the interview, Nyai Mahshunah always emphasised the need for having a good dialogue with the male counterpart. For her, her husband was one of the keys to her success in negotiating the public space. When her husband passed away in April 2003, she managed the pesantren in a collective leadership together with her brothers and sisters-in-law. Upon his death, Nyai Mahshunah felt a great loss, she said: "I lost the supporter who used to encourage me. When I told my husband that I was elected to be the chairperson, he said, 'It is because the people trust you'."⁶⁴ Even during the political campaign, she said that her husband was more enthusiastic than she was.

The involvement of men in supporting the idea or giving women the chance to be empowered also exists generally within the Muslim community, because men gained more privileges within society earlier that gave them more right to speak. For instance, in the Islamic world, Qasim Amin was considered the first Muslim scholar to encourage the idea of women to be educated and empowered through the publication of his book Tahrir al-Mar'ah (Women's Emancipation). During his life, he was known for his active campaign to give women more access to public education.⁶⁵ Within the history of pesantren education for women in Indonesia, Kiai Bisri Syansury and Kiai Hasyim Asy'ary were among the first religious figures who encouraged and provided ideas and access for women to be educated through pesantren education. The development of pesantren education for women was a synthesis of the desires and activities of women coupled with the support of significant male religious figures.

Within a pesantren setting, just like in the local society, men enjoy more privileges in terms of having access to education or other educational resources.

... [D]ue to the early marriage factor. Although the intention and potential to study was great among those pesantren women, since they had to get married, then the opportunities for educational access were limited in that time. Such as Ibu Abidah, Gus Dur's mother, Ibu Wahid Hasyim, they had to learn from their husbands ... the concept of qawwamuna, which is often interpreted as 'dominate'. In my father's interpretation, the word means 'empower'. So the interpretation of the Quranic verse (al-Nisa: 34) is not "men dominate women", but "men empower women", as a person who has a wide opportunity to be empowered, and physically is stronger has two main responsibilities: to cover the financial support for the women and to empower them, on in concrete action it is educating them when as women they have no chance to study...⁶⁶

Kiai Machfudz Anwar even went further in his support for Nyai Abidah's activities, in that he offered to share the domestic burden with her, such as in minding the children to give her more opportunity for public roles. In this regard, Lily Zakiyah Munir viewed her father's offer to share the domestic responsibilities with her mother as quite fascinating, as this occurred in the 1950s. She believed her father was a progressive religious leader due to the internalisation of the 'Islamic values' themselves. It is noteworthy that, in Islam, in fact, there is also an interesting comment on the notion of 'housewife':

... [A] husband is required to maintain the standard of living his wife was accustomed to in her father's home, which may include an obligation to provide domestic help, child care, or even (as was more common in the past) a wet nurse, should his wife desire. If it is not consistent with her premarital lifestyle and status, she may neither be required to perform domestic labor nor even to nurse her own babies. Rather, upon marriage she becomes

Sitt el-bait, or the lady of the house – a term that corresponds more accurately to her role as head manager of the household, and represents a different notion from that of “housewife” in the West.⁶⁷

Nevertheless, such a discourse was not popular in the kitab kuning. There is no evidence about how familiar those nyais were with such a concept. The progressive ideas they had and the amount of power they could share with their male counterparts seemed to them to be natural. One thing is prevalent in their case; they were quite aware of their rights, of what they could achieve in their lives within the framework of the pesantren and religious values. They were also surrounded by male religious figures who were supportive enough, with a particular kind of gender sensitivity as well.

Nevertheless, it would be unfair to conclude that the opportunity attained by those female figures in public positions was simply due to the blessing of the kiai, although the figure of the kiai might be among the factors that supported their public participation. More significantly, the position also had something to do with their personal potential and capabilities and the opportunities available to them within the broader society. In this regard, those nyais had bargaining positions in ‘negotiating’ the public realms, not only with their male counterparts but also with the people who were engaged in the patriarchal view from the pesantren or the local society perspectives. Some of them had to ‘struggle’ with very traditional points of view of women from their fathers’ perspectives. When Nyai Khoiriyah performed several public roles in pioneering the Madrasah Banat (school for girls) in Mecca or participated in the bahsul masail program, this was due to the fact that she was adequately equipped with the tools for these public roles. This confirms Afsaruddin’s view that: “... for women of means and education in Islamic/ate societies, the exercise of power, formal or informal, and negotiation of public space have frequently been less of an ordeal than for women who do not enjoy the same advantages”.⁶⁸

The Notion of Honour and Modesty

Despite the capacity to enter public life, certain conditions are often applied when a Muslim woman inhabits the public space, such as the concern about honour and modesty, or “do they still subscribe to traditional norms of moral behaviour and respectability”?⁶⁹ Hegland’s study on Muslim women majales in Peshawar, Pakistan, also shows how Shi’a women were engaged in subtle gender negotiation and modification through the practice of their religious morning rituals, the ‘majales’. Through this majales they also carried out political work; and by doing this they followed the “central shi’a values and gender expectations: they worked under male guidance in sex-segregated female groups and wrapped themselves in proper pardah veils...”⁷⁰

The women from pesantrens who appeared in the public domain also maintained the norms or values of respectability, especially when there were standard and fixed values either from the ‘Islamic’ perspective or from their society’s standard. This might be one of the ways for them to find a smooth path and acceptance for their presence in the public spheres. They are submissive to those values, accommodate those standards, and adhere to them in the public space. The first noticeable adoption of the ‘Islamic’ values is their dress code, in which all of them cover their head with the selendang and jilbab (the Indonesian covering resembling the veil).

The issue of veiling or dress code seemed to be uncontroversial among those pesantren women. The women from pesantrens have veiled themselves from generation to generation, although the styles might differ. A long selendang or kerudung was worn by the previous generation, while a person such as Nyai Khoiriyah was popular with her attachment to the kerudung rubu’, which mostly resembles the jilbab, which is more popular among the current generation. The style of veiling between Nyai Abidah’s and Nyai Mahshunah’s generation may differ, but the mission they want to carry out with this veiling is almost the same. As Muslim women they intend to show their willingness to adhere to the so-called ‘Islamic’ dress codes as practised in Indonesia at the time. If for some women activists the struggle for empowerment also includes the freedom to choose whether to wear the veil or not, for the pesantren women, there is no compromise at all; they feel it as an obligation, and it is rare to hear them challenge the accepted practice. All of them appear in a dress which as closely as possible may be claimed to be Islamic dress.

It is interesting to learn that Nyai Khoiriyah promoted the concept of kerudung rubu’ to the female students of Pesantren Seblak. This covers the head and the neck and also covers the jewellery of the wearer, to eliminate the social gap between the rich and the poor among her students. Female students showing off their expensive jewellery in the pesantren is considered to be incompatible with the emphasis of pesantren and ‘Islamic’ values on modesty and simplicity. As a response, Nyai Khoiriyah founded a team to solve this problem, and finally a new model of headscarf was introduced, namely the kerudung rubu’ which was assumed to be in conjunction with and suits the youth model. This kerudung rubu’ was firstly introduced in 1964 when Nahdlatul Ulama celebrated its anniversary. At this event, the female students from Pesantren Seblak wore the kerudung rubu’ combined with their long blouse baju kurung and trousers. Although some pesantrens have strict regulations that the students may not to wear any outfit which resembles a man's, such as trousers, according to some alumni of the pesantren from the earlier generation under Nyai Khoiriyah, the students formally dressed up in trousers with a long blouse. Nyai Khoiriyah herself also wore trousers under her traditional jarik, costume, to make her activity more flexible and to help her to keep her *aurat*⁷¹ covered in an active environment.

Not only adhering to the dress code, those women also focused attention on the limitations of their personal relationships. They avoided a close relationship with the men from non-mahram categories (whom they can marry). Nyai Mahshunah said: "I prefer to have a female assistant to help me with my duties. I also try to work seriously and after that leave the office if I feel the works have been completely done, instead of hanging around and having a chat on the different unnecessary issues."⁷² Most of her colleagues are male. There are only three women in the DPRD Jombang. Nyai Mahsunah tends to keep a distance in having a relationship with those male colleagues, since it is believed by the majority of the people that to have a close relationship with non-mahram categories is an improper attitude. They believe that Islam has set the norms and values on this issue, and these values are also cultivated in the pesantren instruction. I also saw the same notion in action when Nyai Abidah did not shake the hands of the male speakers when she gave them a gift after their presentation. She believed a Muslim woman should not shake hands with men except those who fit the mahram categories. She came into the public space as a Muslim woman determined to uphold 'Islamic' values, traditions and etiquette.

5 Santriwati's¹ Life

Religious Femininity in Pesantren Education²

Girls and Pesantren Education

In Indonesia, the pesantren as an Islamic educational institution has been commonly understood to produce an output of religiously devoted persons, the graduates being known as an ulama or a kiai.³ A number of ulamas or religious figures come from a pesantren background, from the national down to the village level. They are primarily male figures. Each of them is accorded a strong sense of [public] religious power and authority. But considering the large number of female pupils in pesantren, one question that might arise is whether they too would be expected to be future ulamas for their society, just like their male counterparts? What does society or parents expect when they send their daughter to a pesantren? Does a pesantren education for girls have a different emphasis from that of a pesantren education for boys, or do the aims of pesantren education manifest themselves in both male and female experiences?

In a discussion entitled “Perempuan Multikultural: Resistensi terhadap Konstruksi Agama dan Budaya” (Multicultural Women: Toward the Resistance of the Religious and Cultural Construction) held at the Faculty of Cultural Science, University of Indonesia, Jakarta, one of the speakers said the experience of women in a pesantren cannot be empowering for them. For him, the pesantren is an institution resembling a harem in the Middle East, as it domesticates its women.⁴ The segregated system of pesantren that separates male and female pupils can be understood as similar to a harem in that it limits women's mobility in their own quarters.⁵ However, a pesantren is certainly not similar to a harem as it is a public educational institution. The life of women within a pesantren were quite different as in the case of several nyai mentioned in the previous chapter; their private and public lives overlapped and are ambiguous. Although it is segregated, a pesantren as an educational institution is still part of the public domain, not a private environment like a harem. Through several conversations with pesantren staff during the fieldwork, they stat that the reason for the physical segregation in a pesantren was not for restricting the physical mobility of women in a male public space, it was more in order to maintain chastity and 'moral' development; the very principles that a pesantren education tried to preserve and are embedded within it.

Several perspectives can help to explain the connection between segregated education/single-sex education and Islamic values. The association of single-sex education and Muslim religious values is discussed in Halstead's work on Islam and single-sex school debates.⁶ In his work, Halstead referred to the idea that single-sex education is derived from Islamic values. In contrast, the preferences for appropriate dress and behavioural codes, specifically for mixed contexts, are made explicit for both men and women in the Quran. "As the Prophet himself and his wife taught mixed-sex groups, it follows that sex segregated institutions could not be mandatory in Islam..."⁷ Azyumardi Azra, a well-known Indonesian historian and Muslim scholar gives a more detailed elaboration that explains the nature of Islamic values and the ideals of segregated education in Islamic history. According to Azra,⁸ in the early period of Islam, there was no educational segregation applied within Muslim community. Even more public access was available for Muslim women. Then, when Islamic jurisprudence began to be codified by Islamic jurists, the tendency to segregate women began, especially in the second century of the hijriyya (Islamic calendar, circa tenth century AD). A woman who wanted to learn would only do so from her close male relatives or from a certain ulama in a situation wherein she would not intermingle with her male counterparts. As a result of Islamic jurisprudence codification, the discourse on men's and women's rights and responsibilities and the principles related to their relationship were also codified and since then have been embraced by the Muslim communities as a tradition.

The concern for protecting women's moral values has also been the basis on which the pesantren world adopts educational segregation. In pesantren education, particularly within the instruction/learning process, the impact of single-sex education has not only affected the arrangement of the classrooms in which male and female pupils are separated, but also extended to the instructors. The basic rule is that female teachers are not allowed to teach male pupils' classes. They can only teach female ones, whereas a male teacher can be an instructor for both male and female pupils. This segregation is applied in most circumstances, ranging from the dormitory to the classroom and the mosque as well as to other pesantren public facilities. The opportunities for girls and boys from the same pesantren to have a social interaction are also restricted. Other social interactions with the opposite sex outside of the pesantren are also limited. Some pesantrens I visited have a written rule or discipline at the entrance of the pesantren that male guests from non-close family members of those female pupils are not allowed to pay a visit.

The girls are protected from having contact with men who belong to their non-*mahram*⁹ categories.

Nevertheless, it is also important to be aware that in reality, the ways in which educational segregation is applied in a pesantren also varies, as there are no common standards or specific guidelines to be followed on this matter by all pesantrens throughout Indonesia. A government agency like the Ministry of Religious Affairs does not set up any standards related to these issues, this agency is concerned with the content of pesantren education, curriculum and the proportion of religious and non-religious subjects as well as pedagogical aspects. The issue of whether it should be a segregated educational model or not, and also the degree of the segregation, is solely dependent upon the internal policy of the given pesantren and its leaders.

According to Husein Muhammad, a traditional pesantren with no formal schooling system used to apply the segregation more strictly.¹⁰ Male and female pupils were not allowed to meet, let alone talk or send personal letters to each other. Pesantrens used to be very careful and strict with regard to personal relationships between the sexes. The opportunities for both sexes to mix with each other were basically very few. However, in my observation in the field, I found the degree of the segregation applied does not depend on whether the pesantren is traditional or not, or whether it has formal schooling or not; it depends more on the pesantren leaders. In the fieldwork area for instance, I used to visit one pesantren that has no formal schooling system and is well known as a pesantren salaf (traditional pesantren) in the region. I could easily observe how social interaction between the different sexes was quite 'flexible' and not strict. When I discussed this observation with one of the nyais from the pesantren, she said this fact is partly due to the flexibility of the kiai or pesantren leader. Before Ramadan 2003, the pesantren held a ceremony like a syukuran (celebration) for those who had already completed their education in the pesantren. During the event, both male and female pupils of the pesantren did some performances on the stages such as nasyid before male and female members of the audience. More importantly, the special speaker invited to the ceremony to give a tausiyah was a woman, a nyai from one of pesantrens in Purwoasri Kediri. The guests and members of the audience were not only kiais, nyais, male and female teachers of the pesantren, but also the parents and local people. The rows of seating for men and women were separated with a small curtain, however it was more a symbolic separation, as the interaction between men and women still happens as in the normal social life of the Indonesian community. The fact that a nyai was a speaker before kiai, [male] teacher and [male] pupils was also interesting, as usually a pesantren would not allow female teachers to teach male pupils.

The Pesantren: Moral Values and Differentiated Gender Treatment

The main concern of pesantren education in relation to moral values has also been outlined in the guidelines for pesantrens published by the Department of Religious Affairs. The book is titled Pedoman Pembinaan Pondok Pesantren 1987/1988 (The guidelines of pesantren 1987/1988: 12-3) published by the Ministry of Religious Affairs. It is mentioned that there are four potential characteristics of a pesantren institution. Firstly, that pesantrens are spread throughout Indonesian society; secondly, they exist in rural locations through which pesantrens maintain close communication with the local people; thirdly, they have the option of a boarding-school system, through which more time can be devoted to learning, as the full day is spent in a pesantren. Finally, the pesantren is an institution for moral education. One of the pesantren leaders in the area said that there were those in the community who began to regard the pesantren as an institution to 'repair' or to 'fix up' the attitudes of an anak nakal (a naughty boy/girl). One of the staff members of a pesantren for boys said that he witnessed a new pupil who had minuman keras (alcohol) in his suitcase when he started his education in the pesantren. Getting drunk is prohibited from the religious point of view and is 'illegal' according to the rules of all of pesantrens. It is also a negative attitude from society's moral perspective. If the community stresses the moral values of the younger generation, a pesantren will preserve it by regulating particular rules and norms inspired by religious and moral values, to be obeyed by the pupils.

For the society in general, the reality that a pesantren is deeply concerned about religious and moral education means that parents rely on it significantly to handle the moral behaviour of their children. Some parents believe that in sending their daughters to the pesantren, they have a guarantee that it will be able to equip their daughters with the necessary religious and moral values for their future lives. In the field area, I found some cases in which pupils were sent to a pesantren at a very early age. One was a three-year-old girl, and another girl was nine years old. The parents had problems with their marriage and wanted to safeguard their children's education and future. The parents trusted the education and social milieu of pesantren to save their girls. The three-year-old girl was treated like their own younger sister by other female pupils of the same pesantren. One of female pupils of the pesantren said, "... just like a child of her age, sometimes she used to cry, particularly in the beginning when she just entered this pesantren, she cried a lot, we minded her together here, taking care of her, bathing her and feeding her; we treated her just like our own sister..."

For female pesantren pupils, apart from the common moral values applied to both male and female pupils, they also have other specific moral values as Muslim women. Female pupils are treated in a particular way, represented by the gender-specific moral values that a pesantren promotes and implants. These moral values derive from both the religious and the socio-cultural aspects of the local society. The pesantren concept of Indonesian Muslim femininity is one that translates to a view of education as a way to prepare women for a future life; to deal with their maternal duties well; morally and religiously be a good wife and a good mother for the future generations. One of the female graduates of a pesantren said of her educational background, "I had no idea, I was just a little girl at that time, it was my parents who suggested that I study at pesantren, because they assumed that a pesantren education could produce a good wife and a good mother, something that every woman will get through this form of education".¹¹ Such a concept is widely embraced within Muslim communities, and the aim of education for girls as a process of preparation for their future maternal duties is not something new within Muslim communities either. Even the idea of Qasim Amin, the Egyptian Muslim scholar who initially campaigned for women's education within the Muslim world, is also similar. For Amin, education is a way to prepare better wives or more knowledgeable mothers to better develop the future generations.

It is impossible to raise successful men if there are no mothers capable of preparing them for the success. That is the noble profession which civilization has entrusted in the woman in our age. She undertakes her heavy load in all civilized countries where we see her giving birth to children, then fashioning them into men.¹²

The above perspectives are also adopted by major South and Southeast Asian societies,¹³ such as Malaysia.¹⁴ In the Indonesian case, such an ideology has been strongly supported by the state and inspired various programs for women, particularly under the New Order regimes of Suharto's presidency. The New Order regime always tried to homogenize the idea of gender roles across the Indonesian archipelago.¹⁵ The 32-year-old New Order regime in Indonesia enforced such an ideology for women. "Women are enjoined, as citizens, to carry out their wifely and motherly duties."¹⁶ Therefore, it is not only pesantren education that has been influenced by such an ideology, but also the general education system in Indonesia.¹⁷

A specific treatment or content of education for girls in a boarding school like a pesantren is mentioned in scholarly works on boarding schools and segregated education. In her article on "Privileged, Schooled and Finished: Boarding Education for Girls", Okely elaborates on 1950s British boarding-school education: "as members of the same social class the girls and boys may share similar educational experiences, but as members of different gender categories some of their education may differ".¹⁸ Okely's portrayal of early England boarding schools is not directly comparable, but in the sense of implementing gender-specific educational treatment for the girls, the experience is also true in pesantren education. Apart from the physical segregation applied between girls and boys in pesantrens in Indonesia, the emphasis of the educational message conveyed to both groups also varies. If within general schooling both sexes receive the same subjects and the same educational message, within a segregated educational system, a pesantren can easily place more emphasis on feminine ideals for female pupils for instance. There are some subjects or textbooks introduced to female pupils, but not to male pupils, particularly the textbooks on the details of marital relationships like Uqûd al-Lujjayn. Some pesantrens have cookery and knitting skills in their curriculum, which are provided for female pupils only.

The provision of different subjects is made even more possible because of the boarding school system of pesantren, in which the pupils are lodged in dormitories in a pesantren complex. In manifesting their functions as a moral institution, the pesantren creates rules that have to be respected and obeyed by all pupils, both male and female. All pesantrens have their own rules, which in most cases have some similarities with slightly different emphases or details. For instance, one pesantren does not allow female pupils to wear trousers, which are thought to resemble a man's outfit, whereas another pesantren might have some flexibility as long as trousers are not tight-fitting or made of denim. In comparing several rules from several different pesantrens in the field, I found that female pupils have more strict rules compared to their male counterparts. For instance, although both groups have some limitation on access out of a pesantren complex, male pupils are given more flexibility. Some pesantrens have a regulation that a female pupil has to be picked up by her parents or close (male) relative as a pre-requisite for her to return home, whereas other pesantrens arrange for their female pupils to go back in a group provided a teacher guardian is with them. Such a practice is not applied to male pupils.

Nevertheless, even with such rules and restrictions, these female pupils seems to grow up like other normal teenagers of their age. They have fun in their lives, share their personal stories i.e. their feelings for certain boys; they are fans of a favourite actress, etc. During fieldwork, one of the female pupils told me how she admires the Bollywood actor Shahrukh Khan. She said that as an actor Shahrukh Khan is very talented: "How could one person act as two different contradictory characters at the same time? The first time, I didn't like him, I thought he was a prototype of the playboy actor, but then I became his fan. For the Hollywood actors, I favour Tom Cruise and Antonio Banderas. When I am at the pesantren I rarely watch TV, but if I return home, for sure I'll watch TV." The female pupils at different pesantrens I observed read teenager magazines ranging from religious ones to popular ones. The owner of the bookshop in the area said that the magazines most frequently purchased by the female pupils are Hidayah, Annida and Aneka Yes. The third one is a popular teenager magazine in Indonesia. However, the pesantren had already set up a rule that none of the pupils was allowed to go to the movies, and none of them was allowed to have a date while being a pupil and living in the pesantren.

Kitab Kuning: On Gender Relations

In his ground-breaking work, van Bruinessen has already provided an extensive account of the kitab kuning taught throughout Indonesia, Thailand and the Malay peninsula. The lists of kitab kuning that Bruinessen collected reflect the range of textbooks used in Indonesian pesantrens to teach Islamic exegesis, theology and jurisprudence, as well as Arabic grammatical rules.¹⁹ Teaching and learning kitab kuning has been an integrated part of the pesantren learning tradition. The kitab kuning contains a variety of materials that can be classified into several main subjects, such as tafsir (Quranic exegesis), fiqh (Islamic jurisprudence), etc. The majority of kitab kuning are classical texts written by Middle Eastern ulama. Nevertheless, some ulama Jawi (the ulama from the Archipelago) have also written a number of kitab kunings, such as Syaikh Nawawi al-Bantany, Syaikh Arsyad al-Banjary, etc.²⁰ In the majority of pesantrens, the key subject of the curriculum is fiqh.²¹ According to Muhammad, who is himself a kiai from a pesantren in West Java, "there are indeed several problems in fiqh concerning gender roles and the status of women, leading to the idea of marginalizing women".²² On the other hand, Kiai Sahal Machfud, a NU ulama and pesantren leader of Central Java, argued that in fact the kitab kuning contains some empowering aspects for women as well: for instance, women are glorified in a mother-and-son/daughter relationship, and women and men are equal in terms of their spirituality before Allah.²³ The spiritual equality is acknowledged especially when the authors of kitab kuning discuss the Quranic verses Innâ akramakum inda Allah atqâkum (The most noble of you before Allah is the most devout of you), as the verse conveys the meaning of the equality of all human beings before God. He goes on to further elucidate the issue of gender equality:

[A]lthough it contains some empowering perceptions on women, this does not mean that fiqh has no problems with regard to women issues. For instance in dealing with the choice of life partners, a woman is faced with the concept of ijbar.²⁴ In accessing the information from the external world, a woman is still stigmatised by the assumption that there is no need for them to be provided with external information (professional knowledge) as their roles are basically at home.²⁵

For female pupils, there is an emphasis on the kitab kuning related to marital life and domestic life more broadly, such as 'Uqûd al-Lujjâyn, Adâb al-Muâsarah, and Qurratul 'Uyûn'.²⁶ Criticism of the kitab kuning in regard to gender issues is quite common today, even with the people from a pesantren background. Masdar Mas'udi, the director of P3M, is known as one of the pioneers who tried to deconstruct the patriarchal religious interpretation in the kitab kuning discourses. Mas'udi argued that the gender bias of the kitab kuning is of a sociological rather than theological nature.²⁷ One of the factors behind it, according to Mas'udi, is the fact that the majority of fiqh scholars were themselves male and lived in the male-dominated period of the Middle Ages in Middle Eastern settings.²⁸ Therefore, fiqh seems to promote the status quo and therefore "has no critical discourse of the dominant realities now in existence".²⁹ In one of his works, Mas'udi encourages the presence of female ulama to give a balanced perspective to the male ulama who have dominated the religious discourse as a whole, including matters which are specifically related to women.³⁰ Similarly, van Bruinessen confirmed that female ulama could come up with a more balanced elaboration and interpretation regarding women's issues in the kitab kuning.³¹ He mentions the example of a kitab kuning entitled Perukunan Jamaluddin, written by a Malay female ulama, Fatimah.³² This kitab kuning is a concise and simple textbook on the rituals of prayer, fasting, and some Islamic jurisprudence matters. According to van Bruinessen, the elaboration in the kitab kuning created by Fatimah does not regard women as inferior or less pure, but rather treats women's issues in a more balanced and egalitarian way.³³

Moreover, most kitab kunings were written in the Middle Eastern socio-historical context, and to some extent do not properly represent the real lives of Muslim women in other parts of the world like Indonesia. Because of this, Wahid promoted the idea of 'fiqh Indonesia' (Indonesian Islamic jurisprudence), the fiqh that is based on the realities in the Indonesian context and practised within the Indonesian (Muslim) communities.³⁴ The socio-political situation of Indonesian women is dissimilar to that of the Middle East or other countries.³⁵ Based on fiqh, the women from countries such as Saudi Arabia are not allowed to have wide access to the public space or to act as religious judges. Albeit within certain limitations, Indonesian Muslim women can be involved in various public activities or professions, and there are also some Indonesian women who have been appointed as religious judges, something that is not very common in other Muslim countries, even in another Southeast Asian Muslim country like Malaysia.

Uqûd al-Lujjāyn in the Pesantren

In the discussion of gender and Islam, particularly related to pesantren, Uqûd-al-Lujjāyn is one of the kitab kunings taught and is always an issue of central discussion and criticism. Compared to other kitab kuning, this kitab is quite frequently criticized, as it is believed to convey the idea of non-egalitarian gender relations between husbands and wives or men and women in Muslim marital life. In my observation, this kitab is not taught for male pupils, but mainly for female pupils or women participants of majelis taklim. Compared to other *kitab*s discussing the same topic, Uqûd al-Lujjāyn is much more popular within the pesantren world and has become the main textbook on the rights and responsibilities of a husband and a wife, or marital life in general.³⁶

The author of this kitab was Imam Nawawi al-Bantany, a nineteenth-century Mecca-based ulama, originally from Tanara, Banten.³⁷ He was highly esteemed for his knowledge of Islamic jurisprudence and Quranic exegesis. Nawawi was among the most productive ulama Jawi, writing 24 kitab kunings.³⁸ He had a strong influence on the ulamas from different parts of the Archipelago. Among his pupils were the well-known ulamas such as Kiai Hasyim Asyary, Kiai Ahmad Dahlan, and Kiai Cholil Bangkalan and some other ulamas from the Archipelago. All of Nawawi's kitab kunings are still published and sold in Indonesia, and perhaps the most popular of his fiqh works is Uqûd al-Lujjāyn. Mustofa Bisri³⁹ in the introduction to a critical analysis on Uqûd al-Lujjāyn commented:

... [I]n reading academic work, either kitab kuning or other textbooks, apart from looking at the method applied in the work, we also have to be aware of the sociological setting when the work was written. As we know, Imam Nawawi wrote Uqûd al-Lujjāyn around 1294 H [circa nineteenth century A.C.], when he was 64 years old. This was more than one century ago. From the period when he wrote the book we can understand and even we cannot imagine something more than what he wrote in his work. Furthermore, he also wrote his work using the transmission method, in which he referred to the previous ulamas. If at the recent time, the issue of gender is still problematic and women are not appreciated as they should be, can we imagine what happened one century ago?⁴⁰

Regardless of discussions and critics, this kitab is still used in a number of pesantrens in Java, although it is not very popular in other regions of Indonesia like Aceh. Some pesantren in Java had a session on the kitab during Ramadan. When I was in the field, I participated in the class of Uqûd al-Lujjayn, in which all of the participants were teenage pesantren pupils. It is difficult to evaluate the impacts of the contents of the kitab on those teenagers. What I observed was during the lesson, those female pupils smiled and laughed when the discussion was about the romantic relationship between husband and wife, none of them asking for clarification on particular issues discussed in the kitab, even on issues which seem to be uncommon and difficult to apply in current social life.

Some nyais I met in Jombang said that although it seemed to be problematic, she still decided to teach the kitab to her pupils. "The content of the kitab is just to make women keep alert", in her words "untuk jaga-jaga" (for alert), meaning that the text advises the highest and best boundaries. "It is better to know the highest boundaries and the worst possibilities, and be prepared for not going beyond those boundaries. If I am teaching the kitab I will contextualise the text to the current time, and our own context." If the kitab emphasizes the life of women in the household and glorifies the total submission of wife towards husband even to the extent of not going outside the home without his permission, although she received the news that her parent was severely ill (one of the stories mentioned the kitab and quoted a lot in the religious sermon in Indonesia), then, in reality, the nyais of the pesantren show by example that they themselves are active outside the household. By her actions, the nyai has created an alternate 'text', and this 'text' also has an impact on their female pupils. It is the public activities of the nyais as santri ibu that provide a model for the young girls in the pesantren, casting a different perspective on the ideas inscribed in the textbooks. Their admiration of their nyais, their roles and knowledge were commonly encountered through the conversation with female pupils in the field.

The teaching of the kitab kuning has been a main characteristic of learning and instruction in a pesantren.⁴¹ The gender discourse in the kitab kuning taught in pesantren has been studied by Mas'udi,⁴² Mahfudz,⁴³ and Muhammad,⁴⁴ all of them coming from a pesantren background. They highlight some of the problems pertaining to women's issues in the Islamic classical literature of some *kitab kuning*s taught in pesantren, particularly on the subject of Islamic jurisprudence. Their thoughts represent those of critics from within the pesantren community itself. Anik Farida mentions that introducing a contemporary discourse of gender issues to a pesantren will inevitably lead to criticism of some materials on gender relations elaborated in the kitab kuning.⁴⁵

Nonetheless, according to Farida, amidst the challenges of introducing gender perspectives within the pesantren, the snowball of gender discourse in the pesantren world continues to roll.

As an example of the conflicting patriarchal ideas in the pesantren textbooks, in Uqûd al-Lujjāyn it is mentioned that a husband is allowed to beat his wife for several reasons, such as if a wife refuses to beautify herself for the sake of her husband, if a wife goes out of the house without his permission, if a wife uncovers her face in front of the non-mahram category, or if she talks with other men. The author's description of the right of a husband to "educate" his wife by beating her reflects how he was influenced by the historical and sociological context of his time, especially with reference to the covering of the face. Although an in-depth study of the Uqûd al-Lujjāyn might also show some pro-gender perspectives in the textbook, the patriarchal images are much stronger.

Beyond Uqûd al-Lujjāyn, there are several other references in the discussion of marital relationships between husband and wife taught in the pesantren world. During the fieldwork, through my observation of some pesantren for girls in the area, I found two other textbooks which are also used to teach the female pupils, namely Qurratul 'Uyûn and Adâb al-Muâsharah. Although the textbooks take different perspectives on marital life or gender relations between husband and wife, the basic concept of looking at the nature of gender relations between a man and woman is relatively similar. Among the three textbooks, it seems that Adâb al-Muâsharah is a little more contextual in accommodating the contemporary sociological contexts of Muslim women.

Apart from the issue of marital relationships, the textbooks also contain materials on specific moral behavior for girls in their early teens namely Akhlâq li al-Banât (ethics for girls). Akhlâq li al-Banât discusses the ideal figure of a teenage girl who studies seriously, has a good relationship with her family, relatives, and friends, and diligently assists her mother in domestic activities. In this kitab, the gender relation is polarised in a simplistic dichotomy, as reflected by the parents of the subject: her father works outside the household, and her mother stays at home, dealing with the domestic chores. In fact, many local women, especially those at the grassroots level, also participate in traditional economic activities outside their household to earn additional income for the family. However, such realities are not accommodated in the textbook, although it was written by a local author. This is a sample of some passages that are related to the idea of women's domestic activities:

Zainab is a diligent girl, since she was very young she loves to work, and hates laziness, and she loves to help her mother at home. If her mother cooks and makes a cake, or washes the clothes she will approach her and try to practise it and imitate what she did. If her mother asks her something she will help her immediately, once she was asked by her mother to buy some groceries, at other times she was asked to go to the neighbours' and relatives' houses. She will not refuse, therefore she received the blessing from her mother. And then it does not take long until she is able to do the domestic chores by herself, and she replaces her mother's position in this regard, and her mother could have a rest from her burdens, and you should be like this beloved girl.⁴⁶

In addition, although this kitab does not talk about the duties and responsibilities of a husband and wife, it does describe a particular gender ideal represented by the figure of the parent. A mother is portrayed as being at home, doing the domestic chores as well as taking care of the children, whereas a father works outside the house and earns the income for the family.

Your mother is caring for you all the time, in the morning she wakes you up, then she bathes you and puts on your dress, and combs your hair, then she prepares breakfast for you. In the afternoon, she prepares your lunch and in the evening she prepares your dinner...⁴⁷ Please be advised girls, like your mother, your father also loves you, he is going out every day from home, enduring the suffering to earn money to cover you and your mother and your siblings. He bought clothes and goods for you, your mother and your siblings.⁴⁸

In this kitab kuning, the gender relation is polarised in a dichotomous way; a man works outside the household and becomes the breadwinner for the family. In the text, women are rarely described as doing work to support the family financially. They refer to the classical Islamic jurisprudence, in which basically women are exempted from earning income for the family. This ideal concept also exists in several other kitab kunings.

In addition to the influence of the textbooks, the element of local Javanese ideals of gender relationships in the pesantren tradition should also not be disregarded. A pesantren is significantly shaped by both local and non-local influences. The Javanese concept of kanca wingking (a partner at the back), meaning that women should stay within the domestic arena and support their husband from within the home, reinforces these behaviours and beliefs. The pesantren tradition is a result of the intersection between the local tradition of the Javanese and the non-local tradition of the universal Islamic learning tradition, particularly from the Middle East. If the kitab kuning such as Uqûd al-Lujjāyn is the product of the Middle Eastern socio-historical context, the perspectives in the kitab kuning are able to be more fully grounded culturally and religiously in the Javanese context. This makes the teachings of the kitab kuning stronger, and the ideas are more easily assimilated. On the gender issue and kitab kuning, Anik Farida⁴⁹ published an article on gender discourse in pesantrens based on her research in a Magelang pesantren of Central Java province. She described how pesantrens, regardless of the claim of their resistance towards modernisation, still respond to the gender discourse in their own ways.

The attempt to 'contextualise' the kitab kuning from an analytical and critical perspective, particularly that of Uqûd al-Lujjāyn, has been conducted by the Forum Kajian Kitab Kuning (FK3, forum for the study of kitab kuning), chaired by Sinta Nuriyah A. Wahid⁵⁰. The team criticizes the kitab kuning by utilizing a critical and analytical method, in which first of all they provide the original text from the kitab kuning, followed by a critical study of the authenticity of the hadits or references of the kitab kuning, followed by analytical comments on the contextual and to some extent logical sequence of the cases presented in the kitab. The result of their work is published as a book, both in Indonesian and in Arabic.

Nevertheless, in my fieldwork I found that almost all of the pesantrens I visited and studied still use the original kitab kuning of Imam Nawawi, although some of the nyais were concerned with contextualising the kitab kuning. When I questioned one nyai as to why they did not use the outcome of the forum for a study on the kitab kuning, she said: "That is a good idea, yeah why not try that one."⁵¹ Her opinion reflects her personal opinion and concern about the contradictory messages and therefore the ambiguous message of the kitab kuning that does not reflect the reality of women's lives. Nevertheless, in the interview, she also said that the kitab kuning was a product of a great ulama. From that point of view, she really respected the kitab kuning, but she suggested that there should be some efforts from the pesantren to contextualize it, and she said that this could be achieved through the instructional process in the classroom. Teaching the [original] kitab kunings has been a core characteristic of the educational identity of pesantren learning instruction. Pesantren education does not have a tradition of replacing the old classical textbooks of the kitab kunings with 'revised kitab kunings' for instance. This is something which commonly happens in the regular schooling system in Indonesia, in which textbooks are regularly revised (kurikulum yang diperbaharui, revised curriculum). The commitment to the old texts is related to the philosophical concept of a pesantren as the institution that maintains the Islamic classical learning tradition.

Some pesantrens might not include the above kitab kunings in their curriculum. For instance, in the case of Pesantren Salafiyah al-Machfudz Seblak, ‘Uqûd al-Lujjâyn is not part of the curriculum, either on the regular educational program or the Ramadan course program. Lily Zakiyah Munir, Nyai Abidah’s daughter, said: “It was never taught there, I don’t know exactly why it was so, it seemed that my father could not trust the kitab...”⁵² However the kitab kuning is taught in the majority of the pesantrens in the area, particularly during the Ramadan course; but the program was not taught to male pupils.⁵³

Santriwati* and Their Personal Stories

The difference experienced between the ideal and the real shows the ambiguity of teaching a strict division between public and private worlds.⁵⁴ During the course of my fieldwork, I had the opportunity to speak with and interview some female pupils of three different pesantrens for girls in Jombang. These were unstructured, informal interviews. The girls talked freely and openly, sometimes deeply, about their dreams and future. I was struck by how they still freely created images of their future, even within some restrictions of the pesantren education. This offered a rare glimpse into the impact of pesantren education on the thoughts and aspirations of individual pupils. The names of the female pupils are pseudonyms to protect their privacy.

Sakinah’s Story

Sakinah spent her time after elementary school in two pesantrens. When I met her, she was among the senior pupils of her present pesantren. As someone who had experienced two different pesantren educations with two different situations, she seemed to be mature among pupils. She was a determined person. In the interview, she spoke frankly of her future dreams. She said confidently:

I want to be a career woman and also have a role in serving the community. If I can make a wish, I also want to have a husband who can understand my activities outside the household, but it does not mean that I neglect my primary duties at home. The nyai used to say, “If you have completed your main duties at home, then why not have activities outside”.⁵⁵

In her statement, she emphasized that when she leaves home for her career, it does not mean she neglects her tugas utama (primary duties).

For her, a well-managed household is also a pre-requisite for having activities outside the home. To make it more complete, she wants to have a supportive husband who can understand her wish for a career. Like the majority of Indonesian women, she also put the harmony of the family as her priority; therefore, having an understanding husband would prevent conflict and misunderstanding between them regarding her duties within and outside the household.

During the conversation, she also told me more about what sort of career and activities she planned to do in the future.

I have a lot of dreams, I want to work with a foreign company in the economic division, using the Islamic economic concept, I also want to have an NGO, which will help the naughty children, the drunken ones who are also involved in using drugs, to train them in particular skills, and then they could return to a better life. There are a lot of children like that in my village.⁵⁶

At first, it seems odd to hear her dream of working in the economic division, and even with a foreign company, given the fact that the pesantren is basically an institution which focuses on teaching Islamic knowledge. However, her further statement about implementing the Islamic concept makes clear the influence of the pesantren education on her as she creates a dream for her future career. Another point that can be picked up from her statement is her intention to establish a non-governmental organization (NGO) to help drug users and train them, which is a reflection of a response towards a social problem. It points to how life within the pesantren, where the pupils are 'secluded' in their dorm and have limited contact with the local people, does not necessarily make the pupils lose their local sensitivity. In this regard, the effort to portray the pesantren as a community institution is relatively true. In a broader perspective, the pesantren still has a strong attachment to the local people; the means may be different, but the pesantren pupils are particularly motivated to serve the community. The above case also suggests that women are not exceptions in this regard. Another dream for her future that she shared with me was to be a "nyai". When I asked her what she meant by that, she said that whatever it means, the most important thing for her is to be an active woman who can control and manage an educational programme.

Jamilah's Story

On another occasion, I had the opportunity to meet another female pupil from a different pesantren. Jamilah has no formal education except for her traditional pesantren education. This means that she could not continue her studies in a formal educational institution. In addition, she has no certificate of formal education, one of the requirements if she wants to apply for a job. She thus concentrated on memorizing the Qur'an.

Basically, my father was illiterate about gender issues, but so far he never forced us to be what he wants. However, somehow I feel embarrassed and very unconfident that I don't have the certificate of formal education, I always attended the traditional pesantren which does not have the formal educational levels of the schools... My mother reminded me that the most important thing in this life is to be a fruitful person for others. The concept of anfa'uhum li al-nas (the most fruitful person for others) has become the philosophy of my life, I just have a very simple dream, I want my life to be of worth for others, that is all, not a big one (cuma itu saja tidak muluk-muluk).⁵⁷

The concept of anfa'uhum li al-nas is commonly heard within a pesantren community. This is also a reflection of values implanted within a pesantren education. While high expectations are placed on graduates of the formal schools to obtain a professional job that generates a good income, it seems impossible for graduates who hold no formal schooling certificate to pursue further education or to apply for a job as some traditional pesantrens do not have a formal schooling system. Within the socialization of the concept of qana'ah (modesty) and anfa'uhum li al-nas, the pupil can still create a "realistic" dream for their future.

Jamilah has a good sense of humour, combined with her maturity from different pesantren experiences. Talking about the regulations of a pesantren, she related how she broke the rule which prohibits pupils from reading novels.

I started reading novels when I was at a traditional pesantren in Tuban district. During the semester break time, it was the season when we can find novels almost everywhere, because it was not under strict control of the staff, at that time there was no "inspection" for the novels. I had even read a pornographic novel because I was really curious what it looks like, then I just read it till I felt myself bored with it, it just told the same thing (ya gitu-gitu ajasampai akhirnya bosan sendiri).⁵⁸

She read novels just for fun and was quite confident that she would not be influenced by the negative impact of the novels. She even believed that it might cause some positive impact in terms of stimulating her budaya baca (reading culture). I asked her, if so, why then does the pesantren not allow the pupils to read novels? She explained that there is a worry that the pupils will be negatively “seduced” by the pornographic content of the novels. Again, it is clear that a pesantren tries to take some precautions against negative impacts on their pupils. Obviously, some of the pesantren's rules are actually based on such a consideration.

Maryam's Story

I also had some discussions with another female pupil who shared her ideas on pesantren education. Maryam said that when she was a little girl, her dream was to be a doctor.

Yeah, when we were young, everyone will say they want to be a doctor, but now, we are mature enough to think what we really want to be. To study at pesantren is my decision, but I got strong support from my parents. I learn a lot from the pondok [pesantren], so it is fair if I also can contribute something for this pesantren in the future... I have a dream of pursuing my further education in Egypt in the subject of Quranic exegesis.⁵⁹

When I asked her, “Do you think some people will say that as a woman, there is no need for you to study in higher education?” She replied confidently, “Kalau kita dengerin omongan orang melulu, kita tidak akan maju” (If we always want to listen to others, then we would not be progressive). It seems on the one hand she is aware of a conservative perception towards women; nevertheless, on the other hand, she does not care about it. Such a strong motivation to pursue higher education is not uncommon among the female pupils of a pesantren. I easily found such a progressive spirit as I talked to other female pupils during my fieldwork.

Discussing their future plans after pesantren education, almost all of the girls showed a great interest in continuing their studies. For them, the tradition of quitting their studies and getting married early is not one that is suitable for the current generation.

Concerning their future careers, the female pesantren pupils have diverse opinions; nevertheless, the common opinion expressed is that they do not perceive having a career or profession in the public domain vis-à-vis domestic ones as conflicting. Within a pesantren education, both of those domains are conflated and ambiguous. On the one hand, the pupils are encouraged to think about their future, to study at a higher level, to be independent, to be employed; on the other hand, the materials teach them to concentrate on their domestic and maternal lives, on being caring mothers and good wives to their husbands.⁶⁰ The women seem to have negotiated a middle ground where they envision being able to balance the demands of both their private and public duties. To empower the women to make this dream a reality, it is important that the pesantren education provides an educational programme that supports and enhances such a process.

Nyai* and Female Pupils of Pesantren: Power and Authority

The motivation of those female pupils to be career women or someone who works to serve the community indicates their desire to work in the public domain, while keeping up with domestic duties at home at the same time. One of pupils said that she wants to be like the nyai of her pesantren in being an active woman. The way she referred to the advice of the nyai on having a career outside the household shows the influence of a nyai on the female pupils in creating the ideals for their future, as the nyai of her pesantren was an active one. Within such a segregated and hierarchical environment, the engagement of female pupils will be more with nyais than the kiai. The nyai was a leading figure for the female pupils. The female pupils' communal prayers were led by a nyai. In addition, a nyai would also set aside time to give the tausiyah (religious guidance and counselling) to the female pupils. Some nyais were also instructors on particular kitab kunings for their female pupils. On any matter related to the girls within the pesantren, the female pupils will talk to the nyai first instead of the kiai. A nyai who managed a well-known pesantren for girls with her husband said, "if the pupils have some problems that need to be consulted, it is just the same to talk to either nyai or kiai..."⁶¹

However passive the social role of a nyai may be, she is usually very much respected by the female pupils and community. A nyai is also expected to act as a 'coordinator of religious ceremonies'. Marcoes revealed that "there are many cases of a nyai becoming an influential social leader. Quite a few have, in fact, attained great influence and authority in society."⁶² In a pesantren context, compared to other female teachers (ustazahs) who also conduct the instructional process for the pupils, a nyai has more power. Although both nyai and ustazahs teach the [female] pupils, the nyai's influence is stronger because she is a member of the immediate family of the kiai. Rosaldo draws on Weber's distinction between power, influence, and authority insofar as it relates to women. In many instances the nyai has been given authority by the kiai, as well as holding influence and power in her own right.

It is generally conceded that although women may have no authority in a society, they do not necessarily lack in influence or power. The distinction between power and culturally legitimated authority, between the ability to gain compliance and the recognition that it is right, is crucial to our study of women. An authority is in the abstract the right to make a particular decision and to command obedience... power is the ability to act effectively on persons and things, to make secure favourable decisions which are not of right allocated to the individuals of their role.⁶³

If authority is defined as the right to make particular decisions and to command obedience, the role of a nyai in a pesantren discussed in the previous chapters, especially in her relationship with the female pupils, does express such a relationship of authority. Where a kiai is a leader of a pesantren, then a nyai will be his representative in dealing with the female pupils. She often assumes that full authority, particularly in dealing with pesantren for girls or female pupils. I remember my interview with one of the nyais in Jombang about the process of decision-making in her pesantren. She said that basically to talk with a nyai about their problems was sufficient for the female pupils; they don't need to talk to a kiai again. In her position, a nyai will make decisions on matters pertaining to the female pupils, even though formally her husband is the leader of the pesantren for girls.

Nyais are generally admired and revered by their pupils. One female pupil from a different pesantren told me of her admiration for their nyais, due to their qualifications and their wide public activities. Nyais might inspire young female pupils as they consider their ideals and goals for the future. Such an influence is made stronger when a nyai, in her capacity as a leader of pesantren, has the opportunity to transfer her ideas or her personal experiences. In fact, I know that the nyais I discussed in the previous chapters used to do that with their pupils in different ways. The good thing about an active Nyai is that her experience deconstructs the ideal portrayal of women's position as conveyed in the kitab kuning.

Where a Nyai is the sole director of a pesantren, as in the case of Nyai Khoiriyah or Nyai Abidah, their power is similar to that of a kiai of a pesantren. In a situation of collective leadership, as in the current period of Pesantren Slafiyah Syafiyah Seblak under the leadership of Nyai Jamilah's children, the role of a Nyai is still significant since all of the committee is perceived to be at the same level. If a kiai is sole director of both the pesantren for boys and pesantren for girls, his wife or his daughter may act as his associate for managing the pesantren for girls, or even as a director or manager of a pesantren for girls. The degree of 'authority' a Nyai may have in the third case might be lower than in the two previous cases. However, as a family member of a kiai, she is still in the top position regarding her status. Her perceived power and influence among other women in the pesantren are dominant.

Finally, as the leading pesantren figures, nyais and kiais are a type of 'parents' for their pupils. A kiai is also called 'romo' (the Javanese word for ‘father’) by his pupils. A nyai might be addressed as [bu] nyai, or if she is older, she might be addressed as ‘mbah nyai’, or some time ‘mbah ibu’. All of these terms imply respect, as well as the close attachment the santri and santriwati feel, as they use the familial terms. Within the paternal leadership of a pesantren, the relationship between the nyai and female pupils sometimes resembles a mother and daughter relationship. One of female pupils said, “I was very young when I began to study in this pesantren. I knew nothing. For several years now, I have gained many benefits from my study at this pesantren. I owe a lot to this pesantren. For me, the family of the kiai is my family. I don’t have a father and mother here. The kiai and nyai are my parents.”⁶⁴ Parents sometimes send their daughters at a very early age to the pesantren. In the case of young girls sent to pesantren, the precise reason behind the decision is unknown, but for the girls the kiai and nyai were their parents and the other pupils were their sisters. Within the concept of ibuism, in which a woman can legitimately overstep and transcend the domestic boundaries, she figured as a ‘loving mother’, and “this image only can survive where the borderlines of public and private spheres is blurred”.⁶⁵ The designation also denotes the relationship she has with the pupils, her assumption of responsibility within the pesantren and, more broadly, her sense of civic responsibility to the community.

Conclusion

Most of the women's lives within the pesantren compound are not publicly known; the physical segregation applied in most pesantrens has also contributed to this situation. Due to the physical segregation, women's lives in the pesantren have been misunderstood as confined to the private domain of women's world. As in a number of works on pesantrens, women's figures, their agency or even their situation or daily life is ignored, unacknowledged and effectively omitted from the pesantren world. Initially, I assumed this might only appear in earlier works on pesantren, but even in more current and contemporary research this tendency still occurs. In the research that does acknowledge the presence of women in the life and work of the pesantren, there is a tendency to persist with the idea that pesantren women or nyais have weaker agency. My perspective in looking at their agency involves by placing it within their own context of pesantren together with the set of patriarchal values that exist in pesantren traditions, with some limitations and restrictions applied. With this in mind, their roles and agency look not only different but significant. Comparing those pesantren women with men of their pesantren, including kiai, or comparing them with other women that do not have the similar situation they encountered will only come to the conclusion that their roles are weaker, and insignificant.

The initial access to pesantren education for women in Java occurred coincidentally with a general awareness of the significance of education for women at the beginning of the twentieth century. Since then, women have been part of pesantren education, as pupils, instructors, or even leaders. Yet, the pesantren world still adopts a set of patriarchal values, for instance in the leadership succession; male descendants are almost always prioritised. Besides, the majority of pesantren still teach the legacy on gender relations from the kitab kuning which has been criticized for its patriarchal notions. Those textbooks also contained the theoretical split between public and private spheres. Some stories and passage of the textbooks identify a split role of women and men in the discussion of marital life. The notion of public men and private women appears significant. Criticism has been voiced by some figures and organisations regarding pesantrens for something called "gender bias" that the pesantren institution has preserved. Thus, for this reason, some organisations such as P3M through the fiqhunnisa' program, PUAN Amal Hayati, Rahima or NU's women's organisation, Muslimat NU, and Fatayat NU contribute empowerment programs for pesantren or pesantren women.

In this research I observed pesantren women's lives, their agency, and leadership, specifically nyais as main female figures of pesantren. An observation on their lives and agency has presented something beyond the "gender bias" limitations as more complexities of gender roles can be understood. Admittedly, although pesantrens are attached to religious patriarchal values which emphasize the dichotomy of public and private domains, the life of some nyais has indeed illustrated how these dichotomised domains could be 'negotiated'. The lives of pesantren women studied in this research have a peculiar socio-religious character, a marriage between local Javanese values and Islamic ones. Some of them assumed power through the process of 'ibuism' (Nieuwenhuis, 1987), where a wife of kiai is an 'ibu' for her pesantren, and I call this 'santri ibuism', which has roots in the Javanese values of priyazitation.

The main case study of this thesis was Pesantren Seblak, located in Jombang district, East Java province. From Pesantren Seblak, I chose three significant nyais from three different generations, beginning with Nyai Khoiriyah, the first generation, Nyai Abidah, the second generation, and Nyai Mahshuna, the third one. All of them have earned public positions, both in pesantren affairs and beyond. Those nyais and several other nyais discussed in this book might not represent the whole pictures of pesantren women's lives across the Indonesian Archipelago, or even Java, but because of their pioneering position within their pesantren, and perhaps pesantren world, it would also make no sense to disregard or overlook their agency. The real experience of women's lives in an institution called a pesantren shows a more dynamic gender relationship than a simplistic dichotomy of public and private regardless of the 'patriarchal' character attached to the pesantrens. Their intensive engagement in the public space is made possible by several factors. These include their capability and relevant skill or experience as well as the support from their male counterparts (kiais). The notion of maintaining honor and modesty based on the 'Islamic' precepts and pesantren values is well preserved by those pesantren women. Although the social change wrought by these women may not appear significant in a Western context, in the context of the pesantren world of Java, the negotiated move to the public sphere is significant and provides an important role model for future generations.

Notes

Chapter 1

- 1 Karel A. Steenbrink, Pesantren, Madrasah, Sekolah: Pendidikan Islam dalam Kurun Modern, LP3ES, Jakarta, 1986, p. 126.
- 2 See Martin van Bruinessen, Kitab Kuning: Pesantren dan Tarekat: Tradisi-Tradisi Islam di Indonesia, Mizan, Bandung, 1995.
- 3 Martin van Bruinessen, Kitab Kuning.
- 4 Mahmud Yunus, Sejarah Pendidikan Islam di Indonesia, second edition, Penerbit Mutiara, Jakarta, 1979.
- 5 Martin Van Bruinessen, Kitab Kuning, p. 25.
- 6 See Robert W. Hefner, "Introduction: The Politics and Cultures of Islamic Education in Southeast Asia" in Robert W. Hefner (ed.), Making Modern Muslim: The Politics of Islamic Education in Southeast Asia, University of Hawaii Press, Honolulu, 2009, p. 17.
- 7 Abdurrahman Wahid, Menggerakkan Tradisi: Esai-Esai Pesantren, LKIS, Yogyakarta, 2001.
- 8 See the official website of the Ministry of Religious Affairs. www.kemenag.go.id
- 9 Tim penyusun, Kamus Besar Bahasa Indonesia, Balai Pustaka, Jakarta, 1991, p. 499.
- 10 This is an ideal portrait of a pesantren, embodying the concept of introducing the students to the attitude of 'qana'ah' (feeling satisfied with what they have, satisfaction with one's lot in life).
- 11 Aboebakar, Sejarah Hidup K.H.A. Wahid Hasyim dan Karangan Tersiar, Panitia Buku Peringatan Alm. K.H.A. Wahid Hasyim, Jakarta, 1957.
- 12 On a number of occasions in the fieldwork areas in Jombang, I heard some pesantren leaders conveying this kind of message. In his formal speech to the pupils and their parents, one pesantren leader in the area mentioned that through their life in a pesantren a child from wealthy families also learned how to live in a humble, simple environment, very different to the luxurious life s/he has left behind. He also stressed the fact that all of those who study in the pesantren are treated equally. On a different occasion, in the course of a formal conversation with a different pesantren leader, this statement was repeated. Apparently this impression is considered a constituent part of pesantren values.
- 13 Saifuddin Zuhri, Guruku Orang-Orang Dari Pesantren, LkiS, Yogyakarta, 2001,
- 14 Martin van Bruinessen has discussed the origin of the term kitab kuning. He explains that Indonesian Muslim communities use the word buku to refer to a book written in Latin script and the word kitab for one in Arabic script. Van Bruinessen states that the traditionalist groups rely exclusively on kitab kuning in their Islamic learning process. The term kitab kuning literally means a yellow book, because at the beginning of the twentieth century these books were actually printed on yellow paper imported from the Middle East. Modernist groups in Indonesia read kitab putih or white books, written in the Indonesian language and extolling puritanical interpretations of Islam

- which they hope to disseminate among Indonesian Muslim communities. Their ideal contrasts sharply to that of the first group which also accommodates the influence of the local culture and tradition. This situation has led to the negative perceptions of the kitab putih in the world of the pesantren, and until recently some classical pesantren still banned kitab putih. See Martin van Bruinessen, Kitab Kuning, p. 132.
- 15 Clifford Geertz, The Religion of Java, Glencoe, Free Press, Ill, 1960.
 - 16 See Greg Barton and Greg Fealy (eds), "Introduction", in Nahdlatul Ulama, Traditional Islam and Modernity in Indonesia, Monash Asia Institute, Clayton, 1996, pp. xix-xxvi.
 - 17 See Deliar Noer, The Modernist Muslim Movement in Indonesia, 1900-1942, Oxford University Press, Singapore, New York, 1973.
 - 18 See Fajar Kebangunan Ulama: Biografi K.H. Kiai Hasyim Asy'ary, first edition, LKIS, Yogyakarta, 1999. Greg Barton and Greg Fealy (eds), "Introduction". Slamet Effendi Yusuf, et al., Dinamika kaum santri: menelusuri jejak & pergolakan internal NU, Rajawali, Jakarta, 1983. Said Budairy, "K.H. Bisri Syansuri: Tegar dengan Prinsip", Pesantren, I, October, December, 1986. Aziz Mashuri, n.d. Al-maghfurlah KH.M. Bishri Syansuri; Cita-cita dan Pengabdianannya, al-Ikhlâs.
 - 19 Andree Feillard, "Indonesia's Emerging Muslim Feminism: Women Leaders on Equality, Inheritance and other Gender Issues", in Studia Islamika, 4, no. 1, 1997, pp. 83-III.
 - 20 See Greg Barton, Abdurrahman Wahid: Muslim democrat, Indonesian President, UNSW press, Sydney NSW, 2002. Aboebakar, Sejarah Hidup.
 - 21 Aboebakar, Sejarah Hidup.
 - 22 Under the New Order regime, Harmoko, the Minister of Information in Suharto's cabinet and one of the leaders of Golongan Karya, introduced a programme known as 'safari Ramadan' (A Ramadan Journey), in which he and his team visited one pesantren after another in a campaign to popularise the party and to win support for the development programme of the government.
 - 23 Jane I. Smith, "The Experience of Muslim Women: Consideration of Power and Authority", in John L. Esposito(ed.), Islam The Straight Path, Oxford University Press, New York, 1998, p. 90.
 - 24 Yvonne Y. Haddad, "Islam, Women and Revolution in Twentieth-Century Arab Thought", in Yvonne Yazbeck and Ellison Banks Findly (eds) Women, Religion and Social Change, State University of New York Press, Albany, 1985, pp. 275-306.
 - 25 Camilia Fawzi El-Solh and Judy Mabro, "Introduction: Islam and Muslim Women", in El-Solh, Camilia Fawzi and Judy Mabro (eds), Muslim Women's Choices: Religious Belief Social Reality, Berg, Providence, RI, 1994, p. 7.
 - 26 C. Nelson, "Public and Private Politics: Women in the Middle Eastern World", in American Ethnologist, 1974, vol. I, no. 3.
 - 27 See for example Amal Rassam, "Women and Domestic Power in Morocco", International Journal of Middle East Studies, 1980, No. 12.
 - 28 Deniz Kandiyoti, "Bargaining with Patriarchy", Gender and Society, 1988, Vol. 2. No. 3, p. 275.
 - 29 Nayereh Tohidi, "Gurdians of the Nation: Women, Islam, and Soviet Legacy of Modernization in Azerbaijan", in Bodman, Herbert L and Nayereah Tohidi (eds), Women in Muslim Societies: Diversity Within Unity, Lynne Rienner Publisher, London, 1998, quoted by Valentine Moghadam, "Islamic Feminism and Its Discontents: Toward a Resolution of The Debate", in Saliba et al. (eds), Gender, Politics and Islam, University of Chicago Press, Chicago and London, 2002, p. 26-27.
 - 30 Lies Marcoes, "The Female Preacher as a Mediator in Religion: A Case Study in Jakarta and West Java", in Van Bemmelen et al. (eds), Women and Mediation in Indonesia, KITLV Press, Leiden, 1992, pp. 203-227. Faiqoh, Nyai: Agen Perubahan di Pesantren, Kucica, Jakarta, 2003.

- 31 Eva Evers-Rosander, "Women and Muridsm in Senegal: The case of the Mam Diarra Bousso Daira in Mbacke", in Karin Ask and Marit Tjomsland (eds), Women and Islamization: Contemporary of Discourse on Gender Relations, Berg, Oxford and New York, 1998, p. 172.
- 32 This notion was confirmed during my own fieldwork. In one of the graduation ceremonies at Pesantren Madrasatul Quran, the father of the dux of the year, Lulusan Terbaik, said that the success of his son could be attributed to the barakah (the teaching and the blessing) of Bu Nyai. Just after the son had begun his studies, his parents came to Bu Nyai and said, 'Bu Nyai ini anak saya mohon didoakan' ("Bu Nyai, this is my son, could you please pray for him"). The father repeated this statement several times, emphasising that the power of the nyai's barakah had played an important role in his son's achievement. Nevertheless, it should also be recognised that the nyais in pesantren could do more in terms of their public/political participation than a sufistic female leader such as Soknas Magot Diop could do in her position of inherited tariqa leadership.
- 33 C. Coloun, "Women, Islam and Barakah" in C. Coulon and D. Cruise O' Brien (eds) Charisma and Brotherhood in African Islam, Clarendon Press, Oxford, 1988.
- 34 Robert A. Fernea and Elizabet W. Fernea, "Variation in Religious Observance among Islamic Women" in Keddie (ed.), Scholars, Saints, and Sufis: Muslim Religious Institutions in the Middle East Since 1500, University of California Press, Berkeley, Los Angeles, London, 1972, pp. 385-401.
- 35 Jane I. Smith, "The Experience...", p. 90.
- 36 Asma Afsaruddin, "Introduction" in Asma Afsaruddin (ed.) Hermeneutics and Honor: Negotiating Female "Public" Space in Islamic/ate Societies, Harvard University Press, Centre for Middle Eastern Studies of Harvard University, Cambridge etc, 1999, pp. 1-28.
- 37 Irwan Abdullah, (ed.) Sangkan Paran Gender, Pustaka Pelajar, Yogyakarta, 2003, p. 4.
- 38 Therese Saliba, "Introduction" in Saliba et al. (eds), Gender, Politics and Islam, University of Chicago Press, Chicago and London, 2002, p. 4.
- 39 See, for example, Susan Blackburn, Women and the state in modern Indonesia, Cambridge University Press, Cambridge, 2004. Elsbeth Locher-Scholten and Anke Niehof (eds). "Introduction", in Locher-Scholten and Niehof (eds), Indonesian Women in Focus: Past and Present Notions, Foris Publication, Dordrecht-Holland, 1987, pp. 1-9. Van Bemmelen et al. (eds), Women and Mediation in Indonesia, KITLV Press, Leiden, 1992. Jane Moning Atkinson and Shelly Errington (eds). Power and Difference: Gender in Island Southeast Asia, Stanford University Press, Stanford, 1990.
- 40 Jane I. Smith, "The Experience...", p. 105.
- 41 See for example Jutta Berninghausen and Birgit Kerstan, Forging New Paths: Feminist Social Methodology and Rural Women in Java, Zed Books, London: Atlantic Highland, NJ, USA, 1992. Norma Sullivan, Masters and Managers: A Study of Gender Relations in Urban Java, Allen & Unwin, St. Leonards, N.S.W., 1994
- 42 Daniel, S. Lev, "On the Other Hand?", in Laurie J. Sears (ed.), Fantasizing the Feminine in Indonesia, Duke University Press, Durham and London, 1996, p. 194.
- 43 Susan Blackburn, Women and the state, p. 104.
- 44 M. Quraish Shihab, "Kodrat Perempuan Versus Normal Kultural" in Lily Zakiyah Munir, Memposisikan Kodrat. Mizan, Bandung, 1999, p. 88.
- 45 Kalau menjadi kepala negara saja dibolehkan, maka dalam bidang-bidang yang lebih ringan tentu tidak ada masalah, misalnya kerja di luar rumah bagi para perempuan karir. The translation is mine. Ali Yafie, "Kedudukan, dan Kepemimpinan Perempuan", in Lily Zakiyah Munir, Memposisikan Kodrat, Mizan, Bandung, 1999.
- 46 Jutta Berninghausen and Birgit Kerstan, Forging New Paths, p. 30.

- 47 Hildred Geertz, The Javanese Family: A Study of Kinship and Socialization, The Free Press of Glencoe, Inc, USA, 1961. Jayawardana, "Women and Kinship in Aceh Besar, Northern Sumatra", Ethnology, Jan., 1977, Vol. 16, No. 1, pp. 21-38. Jane Moning Atkinson and Shelly Errington (eds), op.cit. Evelyn Suleeman, "Pendidikan Wanita di Indonesia", in T.O. Ihromi (ed.), Kajian Wanita dalam Pembangunan, Yayasan Obor Indonesia, Jakarta, 1995. James T. Siegel, The Rope of God, University of California Press, Berkeley and Los Angeles, 1969.
- 48 Jayawardana, "Women and Kinship".
- 49 See Kathryn Robinson, "Gender Orders in Some Societies of the Indonesian Archipelago", in Kultur (The Indonesian Journal for Muslim Culture), 2002, Volume 2, Number 2, pp. 1-20.
- 50 Abdurrahman Wahid, Menggerakkan Tradisi.
- 51 See Benedict R. Anderson, "The Idea of Power in Javanese Culture" in Claire Holt (ed.), Culture and Politics in Indonesia, Ithaca and London: Cornell University Press, 1972, pp. 1-69.
- 52 See Zamakhsyari Dhofier, Tradisi Pesantren: Pandangan Tentang Pandangan Hidup Kiyai, LP3ES, Jakarta, 1982. Husein Muhammad, "Pesantren and The Issue of Gender Relation", Kultur (The Indonesian Journal for Muslim Cultures), 2002, Volume 2, Number 2, pages 63-81.
- 53 Valerie L. Hull, "Women in Java's Rural Middle Class Progress or Regress" in Penny van Esterik, Women of Southeast Asia, Center for Southeast Asian Studies, Northern Illinois University, 1996, p. 78.
- 54 Siti Ruhaini Dzuhayatin, "Gender and Pluralism in Indonesia", in Robert W. Hefner (ed.), The Politics of Multiculturalism: Pluralism and Citizenship in Malaysia, Singapore, and Indonesia, University of Hawai'i Press, Honolulu, 2001, p. 256.
- 55 Barbara Hatley, "Theatrical Imagery and Gender Ideology in Java," in Atkinson, Jane Moning and Shelly Errington (eds), Power and Difference: Gender in Island Southeast Asia, Stanford University Press, Stanford, 1990, pp. 177-07.
- 56 Kartini Sjahrir, "Perempuan Intelektual Indonesia: Suatu Pengantar", in Mely G. Tan (ed.), Perempuan Indonesia Pemimpin Masa Depan?, Pustaka Sinar Harapan, Jakarta, Third Edition, 1996, p. 25.
- 57 Barbara Hatley, "Theatrical Imagery... Ward Keeler, "Speaking of Gender in Java" in Atkinson, Jane Moning and Shelly Errington (eds), Power and Difference: Gender in Island Southeast Asia, Stanford University Press, Stanford, 1990, pp. 127-152. Hildred Geertz, The Javanese Family... Valerie L. Hull, Women in Java's Rural. Jutta Berninghausen and Birgit Kerstan, Forging New Paths, Norma Sullivan, Masters and Managers.
- 58 Suzanne April Brenner, The Domestication of Desire: Women, Wealth, and Modernity in Java, Princeton University Press, New Jersey and UK, 1998.
- 59 Barbara Hatley, "Theatrical Imagery...", p. 180.
- 60 See, for example, Helen Creese, Women of the Kakawin World: Marriage and Sexuality in the Indic Courts of Java and Bali, M. E Sharpe, New York and England, 2004. Nancy K. Florida, Sex Wars: Writing Gender Relations in Nineteenth-Century Java, in Jane L. Sears (ed.), Fantasizing the Feminine in Indonesia, Duke University Press, Durham and London, 1996.
- 61 Ward Keeler, "Speaking of Gender in Java", p. 130.
- 62 Barbara Hatley, "Theatrical Imagery...", p. 181.
- 63 Hildred Geertz, The Javanese Family.
- 64 Norma Sullivan, Masters and Managers.
- 65 Ward Keeler, "Speaking of Gender in Java", p. 129.
- 66 Benedict R. Anderson, Language and Power: Exploring Political Culture in Indonesia, Ithaca New York, etc: Cornell University Press, 1990

- 67 Madelon Djajadiningrat-Nieuwenhuis, Ibuism and Priyayization: Path to Power?, in Elsbeth Locher-Scholten and Anke Niehof (eds), Indonesian Women in Focus: Past and Present Notions, Floris Publications, Dordrecht-Holland, 1987, pp. 43-51.
- 68 Suzanne April Brenner, The Domestication of Desire, p. 26.
- 69 Madelon Djajadiningrat-Nieuwenhuis, Ibuism and Priyayization.
- 70 Ward Keeler, "Speaking of Gender in Java", p. 141.
- 71 Ibid, p. 133.
- 72 Barbara Hatley, "Theatrical Imagery...", p. 184.
- 73 I discuss this issue in more detail in the next chapter.
- 74 See for instance Lila Abu-Lughod, (ed.), Remaking Women: Feminism and Modernity in the Middle East, Princeton New Jersey: Princeton University Press, 1998. Fatima Mernissi, Beyond the Veil: Male-Female Dynamics in Modern Muslim Society, Bloomington and Indianapolis: Indiana University Press, 1985. Deniz Kandiyoti, Gendering the Middle East: Emerging Perspectives, London and New York: IB Tauris Publisher, 1996. Moghadam, Valentine, Modernizing Women: Gender and Social Change in the Middle East, Boulder, CO: L. Rienner, 1993. Haleh Afshar, Islam and Feminism: an Iranian Case Study, New York: St. Martin's Press, 1998.
- 75 See for instance Shahida Lateef, Muslim Women in India: Political and Private Realities, London and New Jersey: Zed Book Ltd, 1990. Gail, Minault, Secluded Scholars: Women's Education and Muslim Social Reform in Colonial India, New York: Oxford University Press, 1998.
- 76 Haideh Moghissi, 2005. Women and Islam: Critical Concepts in Sociology, Routledge, London and New York, 2005.
- 77 See, for example, Susan Blackburn et al. (eds) Indonesian Islam in New Era: How Women Negotiate Their Muslim Identities, Clayton: Monash University Press, 1998. Pieterella van Doorn-Harder, Women Shaping Islam: Indonesian Women Reading the Qur'an, Urbana Illinois: University of Illinois Press, 2006.
- 78 Koentjaraningrat, Javanese Culture, Oxford University Press, Singapore etc, 1989.
- 79 Some earlier versions of my doctoral thesis have been published in the Asia Pacific Journal of Education in 2007, discussing women and pesantren education in Indonesia, focusing on the life of female pesantren students and the chapter on "Negotiating Public Space: Three Generations of Nyais in a Jombang Pesantren" in a book entitled, Indonesian Islam in New Era: How Women Negotiate Their Muslim Identity, published by Monash University Press in 2008, and "Pesantren Seblak of Jombang, East Java: women's educational leadership" published in Review of Indonesian and Malaysian Affairs in 2008. In 2009, Bianca J. Smith and Saipul Hamdi published an article on "The Politics of Female Leadership, in Nahdlatul Wathan Pesantren, Lombok Eastern Indonesia" in International Journal of Pesantren Studies.
- 80 The term actor refers to the use of the term mentioned by Mastuhu in his book on Dinamika Sistem Pendidikan Pesantren (the dynamics of the pesantren educational system). In his definition of pesantren elements, the first is the 'actor', which includes the people who are engaged in the educational process of a pesantren, such as kiai, teachers, staff, as well as students. Mastuhu, Dinamika Sistem Pendidikan Pesantren: Suatu Kajian tentang Unsur dan Nilai Sistem Pendidikan Pesantren, INIS, Jakarta, 1994.
- 81 See, for example, Zamakhsyari Dhofier, Tradisi Pesantren. Dawam Rahardjo, Pergulatan Dunia Pesantren: Membangun dari Bawah, P3M, Jakarta, 1985. Sukamto, Kepemimpinan Kiai dalam Pesantren, LP3ES, Jakarta, 1999. Manfred Oepen and Wolfgang Karcher (eds), The impact of Pesantren in Education and Community Development in Indonesia, Technical University Berlin, Jakarta: Friedrich Naumann Stiftung: Indonesian Society for Pesantren and Community Development 9P3M), 1998. Abdurrahman Wahid, Menggerakkan Tradisi. Scott Allen Buresh, Pesantren-based

- Development: Islam, Education, and Economic Development in Indonesia*, UMI, Ann Arbor, MI, 2003.
- 82 See Husein Muhammad, "Pesantren and the Issue".
- 83 For instance see George Makdisi, The rise of colleges: institutions of learning in Islam and the West, Edinburgh University Press, Edinburgh, 1981.
- 84 Zamakhsyari Dhofier, Tradisi Pesantren.
- 85 Kiai is a term used for a pesantren leader who is also in most instances a religious leader. This term is specifically reserved for a male pesantren leader. If a woman becomes a pesantren leader, she will not be addressed as 'kiai' but as nyai – the title she has already gained as an immediate family member of a kiai, regardless of whether she is a formal pesantren leader or not.
- 86 See Lies Marcoes, "The Female Preacher".
- 87 Tim Penyusun, Kamus Besar Bahasa Indonesia, p. 695.
- 88 Madelon Djajadiningrat-Nieuwenhuis, Ibuisism and Priyayization..., p. 43-51.
- 89 Ibid, p. 44.
- 90 In pesantren tradition, sometimes kiai are called 'romo' or 'romo kiai', which in Javanese means 'father' (as one of the parents). In the dayah tradition, teungku are usually called 'abu/abon' or 'waled', all Arabic words for father. A teungku's wife is addressed as umi, which means 'mother' in Arabic. This is one of the indications that both pesantren and dayah apply the concept of family in their education system, in which the leaders or managers are seen as the figurative parents of the students.
- 91 Lies Marcoes, "The Female Preacher".
- 92 Such as Masdar F. Mas'udi, "Perempuan di antara Lembaran Kitab Kuning", in Lies Marcoes and Johan Hendrik Meuleman (eds), Wanita Islam Indonesia dalam Kajian Tekstual dan Kontekstual, INIS, Jakarta, 1993, pp. 155-163. Husein Muhammad, "Kajian Atas Kitab Uqud al-Lujain", Tashwirul Afkar, 1999, no. 5. pp. 94-100.
- 93 Susan Blackburn, Women and the state. Maila Stivens, "Theorising Gender, Power and Modernity in Affluent Asia" in Khrisna Sen and Maila Stivens (eds), in Women in Affluent Asia, Routledge, London etc, 1998, pp. 1-34. Elsbeth Locher-Scholten and Anke Niehof (eds), Introduction. Sita van Bemmelen, "Jender dan Pembangunan: Apakah yang Baru?", in T.O. Ihromi, (ed.), Kajian Wanita dalam Pembangunan, Yayasan Obor Indonesia, Jakarta, 1995, pp. 175-226.
- 94 Bourdieu, Pierre, Outline of a Theory Practice, Cambridge; New York: Cambridge University Press, 1977. C. Nelson, "Public and Private Politics".
- 95 See, for example, Masdar F. Mas'udi, "Perempuan di antara". Husein Muhammad, "Kajian Atas Kitab". Sinta Nuriyah-A. Wahid, et al., Wajah Baru Relasi Suami Istri: Telaah Kitab 'Uqud al-Lujayn, LKIS, Yogyakarta, 2001.
- 96 See, for example, Masdar F. Mas'udi, "Perempuan di antara...".
- 97 Sinta Nuriyah-A. Wahid, et al., Wajah Baru Relasi Suami Istri. Husein Muhammad, "Kajian Atas Kitab".
- 98 Susan Blackburn, Women and the state, p. 33.
- 99 Lila Dubee, Women and kinship: comparative perspectives on gender in South and South-East Asia, United Nations University Press, Tokyo, 1997, p. 150.
- 100 Siti Ruhaini Dzuhayatin, "Gender and Pluralism"
- 101 Budi Rajab, "Pendidikan Sekolah dan Perubahan Kedudukan Perempuan", in Jurnal Perempuan, May, 2002, p. 27.
- 102 Saya Sasaki Shiraiishi, Young Heroes: The Indonesian Family in Politics, Cornell University, Ithaca New York, 1997.
- 103 Achmad Muthaliin, Bias Gender dalam Pendidikan, first edition, Muhammadiyah University Press, Surakarta, 2001, p. 215.
- 104 Fatima Mernissi, Beyond the Veil.
- 105 Evelyn Suleeman, "Pendidikan Wanita di Indonesia", p. 239.

- 106 Martin van Bruinessen, Kitab Kuning.
- 107 Mustofa Bisri, "Ini 'Uqûd al-Lujjayn Baru: Ini Baru 'Uqûd al-Lujjayn", in Sinta Nuriyah A. Wahid et al, Wajah Baru Relasi Suami Istri: Telaah Kitab 'Uqûd al-Lujjayn, LKIS, Yogyakarta, 2001, pp. ix-xi.
- 108 See Masdar F. Mas'udi, "Perempuan di antara". Siti Musdah Mulia, Muslimah Reformis, Mizan, Bandung, 2004. Husein Muhammad, "Kajian Atas Kitab". Husein Muhammad, "Pesantren and The Issue".
- 109 This NGO focuses on the issue of pesantren and women's empowerment.
- 110 See, for example, Husein Muhammad, "Pesantren and The Issue". Masdar F. Mas'udi, "Perempuan di antara". Sinta Nuriyah-A. Wahid, et al., Wajah Baru Relasi Suami Istri.
- 111 Zamakhsyari Dhofier, Tradisi pesantren.

Chapter 2

- 1 See Elizabeth Martyn, The Women's Movement in Post Colonial Indonesia: Gender and Nation in a new Democracy, Routledge Curzon, London and New York, 2005. Sukanti Suryochondro, 2000, "The development of Women's Movement in Indonesia", in Mayling Oey Gardiner and Carla Bianpoen (eds), Indonesian Women: The Journey Continues, ANU, Canberra, 2005, pp. 224, 243. Anita Rahman, "Moslem Women's Organisations: Their Role in Attaining the Benefits of Development", in Gardiner, Mayling Oey and Carla Bianpoen (eds), Indonesian Women: The Journey Continues, ANU, Canberra, 2000.
- 2 See Susan Blackburn, Women and the state in modern Indonesia, Cambridge University Press, Cambridge, 2004.
- 3 Lee Kam Hing, Education and Politics in Indonesia 1945-1965, University of Malaya Press, Kuala Lumpur, 1995.
- 4 Daniel, S. Lev, "On the Other Hand?", in Laurie J. Sears (ed.), Fantasizing the Feminine in Indonesia, Duke University Press, Durham and London, 1996, pp. 191-206.
- 5 Aisla Zainuddin, "Education in the Netherlands East Indies and The Republic of Indonesia", in R.J.W. Selleck (ed.), Melbourne Studies in Education, Melbourne University Press, Carlton Victoria, 1970, pp. 17-83.
- 6 Lee Kam Hing, Education and Politics..., p. 16.
- 7 Saya Sasaki Shiraishi, Young Heroes; The Indonesian Family in Politics, Cornell University, Ithaca New York, 1997.
- 8 The data on the initial efforts to establish the pesantren for girls in Jombang can be found in the biography of Kiai Bisry Syansury. During my interviews with some informants in Jombang, some of them born during the 1920s said that they had studied there, since other pesantrens like Pesantren Tebuireng, Pesantren Seblak and other pesantrens in the regions accepted no female pupils.
- 9 See Taufik Abdullah, Schools and Politics: The Kaum Muda Movement in West Sumatra (1927-1933), Cornell Indonesian Modern Asia Program, Ithaca, New York, 1971.
- 10 Deliar Noer, The Modernist Muslim Movement in Indonesia, 1900-1942, Oxford University Press, Singapore, New York, 1973.
- 11 Taufik Abdullah, 1993, "Kilasan Sejarah Pergerakan Wanita Islam di Indonesia" in Lies Marcoes and Johan Hendrik Meuleman (eds), Wanita Islam Indonesia dalam Kajian Tekstual dan Kontekstual, Jakarta: INIS, Jakarta, p. 80.
- 12 Zamzami Kimin, "Sekelumit Kenang-Kenangan Terhadap Aktivitas Mendiang Kak Rahmah El-Yunisiah (1900-1969)", in Anonymous, Ghalia Indonesia, Jakarta, 1979. n.d. Peringatan 55 Tahun Diniyah Putri Padang, p. 228.

- 13 A great Muslim scholar.
- 14 Taufik Abdullah, "Modernization in the Minangkabau World: West Sumatra in the Early Decades of the Twentieth Century" in Claire Holt (ed), Culture and Politics in Indonesia, Cornell University Press, Ithaca and London, 1972, pp. 179-245.
- 15 Lee Kam Hing, Education and Politics..., p. 39.
- 16 Jajang Jahroni, "Haji rangkayo Rasuna Said:Pejuan Politik dan Penulis Pergerakan", in Jajat Burhanuddin, Ulama Perempuan Indonesia, PT Gramedia Pustaka Utama, Jakarta, 2002, pp. 68-99.
- 17 Lee Kam Hing, Education and Politics.
- 18 Mayling Oey Gardiner and Sulastrri, "Continuity, Change and Women in a Man's World", in Mayling Oey Gardiner and Carla Bianpoen (eds), Indonesian Women: The Journey Continues, Canberra: ANU, Canberra, 2000, pp. 1-23.
- 19 See Azyumardi Azra, Surau: Pendidikan Islam Tradisional dalam Transisi dan Modernisasi, Logos, Jakarta, 2003.
- 20 Azyumardi Azra, Surau: Pendidikan Islam, p. 143.
- 21 Baihaqi AK, Ulama dan Madrasah di Aceh, Lembaga Ilmu Pengetahuan Indonesia bekerja sama dengan Departemen Agama, Jakarta, 1976.
- 22 The students from other educational institutions (not pesantren) are called murid or pe-lajar in Bahasa Indonesia.
- 23 In the pesantren world, the term pondok also specifically refers to boarding houses, the accommodation for the live-in students.
- 24 The term 'pondok' meaning a traditional school is widely used in the Malay or Pattani Muslim community of southern part of Thailand.
- 25 Traditional here is not necessarily something in contradiction to modern. The term describes the characteristic of a pesantren which existed several centuries ago in Indonesian history. Mastuhu, Dinamika Sistem Pendidikan Pesantren : Suatu Kajian tentang Unsur dan Nilai Sistem Pendidikan Pesantren, INIS, Jakarta, 1994.
- 26 B.J. Boland, The Struggle of Islam in Modern Indonesia, Nijhoff, The Hague, 1971, p. 113.
- 27 See Sunarwoto, The Influence of Meccan Education on the Pesantren Tradition, unpublished MA thesis, University Leiden, 2008. Martin Van Bruinessen, Kitab Kuning: Pesantren dan Tarekat: Tradisi-Tradisi Islam di Indonesia, Mizan, Bandung, 1995.
- 28 Mastuhu, Dinamika Sistem.
- 29 C. Snouck Hurgronje, Mekka in the latter part of the 19th century: daily life, customs and learning of the Muslims of the East-Indian archipelago, translated by J. H. Monahan, Brill, Leiden, 1970.
- 30 Ibid.
- 31 Azyumardi Azra, The Origins of Islamic Reformism in Southeast Asia: networks of Malay-Indonesian and Middle Eastern 'Ulam' in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, Allen & Unwin, Crows Nest, N.S.W., 2004.
- 32 Mastuhu, Dinamika Sistem.
- 33 James L. Peacock, Indonesia: An Anthropological Perspective, Goodyear Pub. Co, Pacific Palisades, Calif, 1973.
- 34 Clifford Geertz, The Religion of Java, Glencoe, Free Press, Ill., 1960.
- 35 Clifford Geertz, The Religion of Java, p. 177.
- 36 See for example Zamakhsyari Dhofier, Tradisi Pesantren: Studi Tentang Pandangan Hidup Kiyai, Lembaga Penelitian, Pendidikan dan Penerangan Ekonomi dan Sosial, Jakarta, 1982. Dawam Rahardjo, Pergulatan Dunia Pesantren: Membangun dari Bawah, P3M, Jakarta, 1985. Karel A. Steenbrink, Pesantren, Madrasah, Sekolah: Pendidikan Islam dalam Kurun Modern, LP3ES, Jakarta, 1986. Abdurrahman Wahid, Menggerakkan Tradisi: Esai-Esai Pesantren, LKIS, Yogyakarta, 2001.

- 37 Abdurrahman Wahid, "Principles of Pesantren Education", in Manfred Oepen and Wolfgang Karcher (eds), The impact of Pesantren in Education and Community Development in Indonesia, Technical University Berlin, Jakarta: Friedrich Naumann Stiftung: Indonesian Society for Pesantren and Community Development (P3M), 1988, p. 197.
- 38 Lingkungan pesantren pada umumnya terdiri dari rumah kiai, sebuah tempat peribadatan yang juga berfungsi sebagai tempat Pendidikan (disebut mesjid kalau digunakan untuk sholat Jumat, kalau tidak: disebut langgar atau surau), sebuah atau lebih rumah pondokan yang dibuat oleh para santri dari bamboo atau kayu, sebuah atau lebih ruangan untuk memasak, kolam atau ruangan untuk mandi atau berwudhu. The translation is mine. Karel A. Steenbrink, op.cit., p. 16.
- 39 Some pesantren have evolved from a single-man leadership to a collective leadership or managerial board.
- 40 Pesantren pupils.
- 41 Wolfgang Karcher, 1988, "Pesantren and Government Schools – How Do They Fit Together?", in Manfred Oepen and Wolfgang Karcher (eds), The impact of Pesantren in Education and Community Development in Indonesia, Technical University Berlin, Jakarta: Friedrich Naumann Stiftung: Indonesian Society for Pesantren and Community Development (P3M), 1998, p. 187.
- 42 Mastuhu, 1998, "Principles of Education in Pesantren" in Manfred Oepen and Wolfgang Karcher, (eds), The impact of Pesantren in Education and Community Development in Indonesia, Technical University Berlin, Jakarta: Friedrich Naumann Stiftung: Indonesian Society for Pesantren and Community Development P3M), 1998, p. 208.
- 43 Clifford Geertz, The Religion of Java.
- 44 Most people, particularly those belonging to the wong cilik, use Bahasa Jawa ngoko, the language of the lower class people in Java. Bahasa Jawa halus is commonly used among the aristocratic families, and it is rather more complicated than Bahasa Jawa ngoko. Surprisingly, one female pupil who spoke fluently to a nyai in Bahasa Jawa halus was not Javanese. She came from Riau province in Sumatra. Riau culture and tradition is close to the Malay culture, as is their local language.
- 45 Martin Van Bruinessen, Kitab Kuning, p. 18.
- 46 Martin Van Bruinessen, Kitab Kuning.
- 47 Ibid.
- 48 Zamakhsyari Dhofier, Tradisi Pesantren., p. 56.
- 49 Clifford Geertz, The Religion of Java.
- 50 Hiroko Horikoshi, 1982, Kyai and Perubahan Sosial, P3M, Jakarta, 1982.
- 51 Zamakhsyari Dhofier, Tradisi Pesantren.
- 52 Saya Sasaki Shiraishi, Young Heroes..., p. 88.
- 53 See Sylva Frisk, Submitting to God: Women and Islam in Urban Malaysia, NIAS Press: Denmark, 2009.
- 54 Clifford Geertz, The Religion of Java.
- 55 Susan Blackburn, Women and the state.
- 56 Susan Blackburn, Women and the state, p. 148.
- 57 Elsbeth Locher-Scholten and Anke Niehof (eds). "Introduction", in Locher-Scholten and Niehof (eds), Indonesian Women in Focus: Past and Present Notions, Foris Publication, Dordrecht-Holland, 1987, p. 7.
- 58 Madelon Nieuwenhuis, Ibuisism and Priyayization: Path to Power?, in Elsbeth Locher-Scholten and Anke Niehof (eds), Indonesian Women in Focus: Past and Present Notions, Foris Publication, Dordrecht-Holland, 1987, p. 44.

- 59 Siti Ruhaini Dzuhayatin, "Gender and Pluralism in Indonesia", in Robert W. Hefner (ed.), The Politics of Multiculturalism: Pluralism and Citizenship in Malaysia, Singapore, and Indonesia, University of Hawai'i Press, Honolulu, 2000, pp. 253-267.
- 60 Saya Sasaki Shiraiishi, Young Heroes..., p. 166.
- 61 Buku Peringatan, 1958: 110, as cited by Susan Blackburn, Women and the state, p. 148.
- 62 Saya Sasaki Shiraiishi, Young Heroes..., p. 11.
- 63 Laurie J. Sears, "Introduction: Fragile Identities", in Laurie J. Sears (ed.), Fantasizing the Feminine in Indonesia, Duke University Press, Durham and London, 1996, p. 19.
- 64 Ibid.
- 65 Kartini Sjahrir, "Perempuan Intelektual Indonesia: Suatu Pengantar", in Mely G. Tan (ed.), Perempuan Indonesia Pemimpin Masa Depan?, Pustaka Sinar Harapan, Jakarta, Third Edition, 1996, p. 26.
- 66 Julia I. Suryakusuma, "The State and Sexuality in New Order Indonesia", in Laurie J. Sears (ed.), Fantasizing the Feminine in Indonesia, Duke University Press, Durham and London, 1996, p. 102.
- 67 Kathryn Robinson, "Gender Orders in Some Societies of the Indonesian Archipelago", in Kultur (The Indonesian Journal for Muslim Culture), 2002, Volume 2, Number 2, pp. 1-20.
- 68 Cited by Sylvia Tiwon, "Models and Maniacs: Articulating the Female in Indonesia", in Jane L. Sears (ed), Fantasizing the Feminine in Indonesia, Duke University Press, Durham and London, 1996.
- 69 Mayling Oey Gardiner and Sulastri, "Continuity, Change and Women...", p. 21.
- 70 See Melani Budianta, "Suara Ibu Peduli: Panggilan Nurani Warga", Jurnal Perempuan, Jakarta: Yayasan Jurnal Perempuan, 1999, pp. 2-6.
- 71 Gadis Arivia, "Politik Susu" Pendobrakan Bidang Politik", Jurnal Perempuan, Jakarta: Yayasan Jurnal Perempuan, 1999, p. 7.
- 72 Melani Budianta, "Suara Ibu Peduli", p. 4
- 73 Rochayah Machali, "Women and the Concept of Power in Indonesia", in Susan Blackburn (ed.), Love, Sex, and Power, Clayton: Asia Monash Institute, 2001, p. 13.
- 74 Ibid.
- 75 Ward Keeler, "Speaking of Gender in Java" in Atkinson, Jane Moning and Shelly Errington (eds), Power and Difference: Gender in Island Southeast Asia, Stanford University Press, Stanford, 1990, p. 144.
- 76 Tim penyusun, Kamus Besar Bahasa Indonesia, Jakarta: Balai Pustaka, 1991, p.695.
- 77 Lies Marcoes, "The Female Preacher as a Mediator in Religion: A Case Study in Jakarta and West Java", in Van Bemmelen et al. (eds), Women and Mediation in Indonesia, KITLV Press, Leiden, 1992.
- 78 Madelon Djajadiningrat - Nieuwenhuis, Ibuism and Priyayization.
- 79 Ibid., p. 44.
- 80 Lies Marcoes, "The Female Preacher",
- 81 Some kiais give their daughters' education priority, not only in religious matters, but also their general education. The children of kiais are usually among the educated people in their community. The social privileges and the economic resources of a kiai will also assist his children to attain a better, more advanced education.
- 82 Lies Marcoes, "The Female Preacher".
- 83 Faiqoh, Nyai: Agen Perubahan di Pesantren, Kucica, Jakarta, 2003.
- 84 Ibid.
- 85 Zamakhsyari Dhofier, Tradisi Pesantren.
- 86 The term 'santri ibuism' has not been used before in combination in the literature.
- 87 I shall refer to a nyai in her position as a pesantren leader with a capital letter 'Nyai', to make a distinction between the general nyai who owes her status to being the wife of a kiai, without necessarily being related to the leadership position.

- 88 Martin Van Bruinessen, Kitab Kuning, p. 18.
- 89 Bianca J. Smith and Saipul Hamdi published an article on "The Politics of female Leadership, in Nahdlatu Wathan Pesantren", Lombok Eastern Indonesia in International Journal of Pesantren Studies Vol. 3, Number 1, 2009, pp. 1-28.
- 90 See Masdar F. Mas'udi, "Perempuan di antara Lembaran Kitab Kuning", in Lies Marcoes and Johan Hendrik Meuleman (eds), Wanita Islam Indonesia dalam Kajian Tekstual dan Kontekstual, INIS, Jakarta, 1993, pp. 155-163. Husein Muhammad, "Kajian Atas Kitab Uqud al-Lujain", Tashwirul Afkar, 1999, no. 5. pp. 94-100. Husein Muhammad, "Pesantren and The Issue of Gender Relation", Kultur (The Indonesian Journal for Muslim Cultures), 2002, Volume 2, Number 2, pages 63-81. Sahal Mahfudz, "Islam dan Hak Reproduksi Perempuan: Perspektif Fiqih", in Syafiq Hasyim (ed.), Menakar Harga Perempuan, Mizan, Bandung, 1999, pp. 113-122.
- 91 Musdah Mulia, Muslimah Reformis, Mizan, Bandung, 2004, p. 102.
- 92 Sabine A.M. Kuyper, "Profil Organisasi Wanita Islam Indonesia" in Lies Marcoes and Johan Hendrik Meuleman (eds), Wanita Islam Indonesia dalam Kajian Tekstual dan Kontekstual, INIS, Jakarta, 1993.
- 93 Robin L. Bush, "Wacana Perempuan di Lingkungan NU: Sebuah Perdebatan Mencari Bentuk", Tashwirul Afkar, 1999, no. 5, pp. 24-33.
- 94 Anik Farida, "Wacana Gender di Pesantren", in Penamas (Penelitian Agama Kemasyarakatan), 2004, Volume XVII No. 1, pp. 20-35.
- 95 Masdar F. Mas'udi, "Perempuan di antara".
- 96 Husein Muhammad, "Pesantren and The Issue", p. 71.
- 97 Bianca J. Smith and Saipul Hamdi published an article on "The Politics of Female Leadership".
- 98 Haidlor Ali Ahmad, "Kesetaraan Gender dan Pemberdayaan Perempuan di Pondok Pesantren", Penamas (Jurnal Penelitian Agama dan Kemasyarakatan), 2000, No. 36, pp. 51-61.
- 99 Aisyah Hamid Baidlowi, "Profil Organisasi Wanita Islam: Studi Kasus Muslimat NU", in Lies Marcoes and Johan Hendrik Meuleman (eds), Wanita Islam Indonesia dalam Kajian Tekstual dan Kontekstual, INIS, Jakarta, 1993.
- 100 Saliba Therese, et al. (eds), Gender, Politics and Islam, University of Chicago Press, Chicago and London, 2002, pp. 1-13.
- 101 See Andree Feillard, "Potensi Perubahan Relasi Gender di Lingkungan Umat Islam: Sebuah Proyek dan Pemaparan Data", in Syafiq Hasyim (ed.), Menakar Harga Perempuan, Mizan, Bandung, 1999, pp. 221-241.
- 102 Greg Barton and Greg Fealy (eds), "Introduction", in Nahdlatul Ulama, Traditional Islam and Modernity in Indonesia, Monash Asia Institute, Clayton, 1996, pp. xix-xxvi.
- 103 Aisyah Hamid Baidlowi, "Profil Organisasi Wanita Islam...", p. 84.
- 104 Ismatu Ropi and Jamhari, Citra perempuan dalam Islam : pandangan ormas keagamaan, Gramedia Pustaka Utama bekerjasama dengan PPIM-UIN Jakarta dan The Ford Foundation, Jakarta, 2003, p. 21.
- 105 Aisyah Hamid Baidlowi, "Profil Organisasi Wanita Islam...", p. 85.
- 106 Ibid, p. 84.
- 107 Anita Rahman, "Moslem Women's Organisations ...", p. 266.
- 108 Aisyah Hamid Baidlowi, "Profil Organisasi Wanita Islam...", p. 85.
- 109 Ibid, p. 87.
- 110 Ibid.
- 111 An expert on fiqh matters.
- 112 Religious legal thought or interpretation.
- 113 Said Aqiel Siradj Islam kebangsaan: fiqh demokratik kaum santri, Pustaka Ciganjur, Jakarta, 1999, p. 22
- 114 Andree Feillard, "Potensi Perubahan Relasi Gender".

- 115 Ibid., p. 224.
- 116 Djohan Effendi, A Renewal Without Breaking Tradition: The Emergence of a New Discourse in Indonesia's Nahdlatul Ulama during the Abdurrahman Wahid Era, Interfidei, Yogyakarta, 2008, p. xxxiii.
- 117 Ismatu Ropi and Jamhari, Citra perempuan dalam Islam..., p. 38.
- 118 Robin L. Bush, "Wacana Perempuan di Lingkungan NU...", p. 32.
- 119 Lies Marcoes, "Women's Grassroots Movements in Indonesia: A Case Study of the PKK and Islamic Women's Organisation", in Kathryn Robinson and Sharon Bessel (eds), Women in Indonesia: Gender, Equity and Development, Singapore: Institute of South East Asia Studies, Singapore, 2001, pp.188-197.
- 120 Zainab, Siti, Nyai, Kiai dan Pesantren, Yayasan Kesejahteraan Fatayat, Yogyakarta, 2001.
- 121 Lies Marcoes, "Mencoba Mencari Titik Temu Islam dan Hak Reproduksi Perempuan", in Syafiq Hasyim (ed.), Menakar Harga Perempuan, Mizan, Bandung, 1999, pp. 15-21.
- 122 The women's section of P3M (the Centre for Pesantren and Community Development) co-operated with some pesantrens in setting up workshops and trainings on gender in pesantren.
- 123 Nyai Noer Cholida from Pesantren Purwoasri in Kediri, East Java, told me that her pesantren had been the host for the gender socialisation training of Fiqhunnisa' P3M.
- 124 Ismatu Ropi and Jamhari, Citra perempuan dalam Islam..., p. 39.
- 125 The director of PUAN, Sinta Nuriyah A. Wahid, was awarded the "highest honour award" from Soka University Tokyo for her efforts in defending the rights of and justice for women.
- 126 I shall discuss the establishment of Cepdes more elaborately in the next chapter (Chapter Three) in the section of Pesantren Seblak.

Chapter 3

- 1 Some parts of this chapter have been published in Review of Indonesia and Malaysian Affairs, vol. 42, No. 1, 2008.
- 2 Jombang is the name of the district, and the name of the sub-district as well of the capital city of Jombang (see the map of Jombang).
- 3 Summary EMIS Departemen Agama, 2001-02, p. 4.
- 4 Ibid., p. 1.
- 5 Interview with the staff of EMIS Depag (Department of Religious Affairs), who were charged for arranging the statistical data of pesantren on January 7, 2003 in Jakarta.
- 6 These four pesantrens are very popular and influential among Nahdlatul Ulama communities.
- 7 EMIS Departemen Agama 2003-2004.
- 8 Rekap Pendataan, 2003.
- 9 Rekap Pendataan, 2004.
- 10 See Rekap Pendataan, 2003 and 2004.
- 11 Kabupaten Jombang dalam Angka, 2002: xii.
- 12 Ibid., xvii.
- 13 Zamakhsyari Dhofier, Tradisi Pesantren: Studi Tentang Pandangan Hidup Kiyai, LP3ES, Jakarta, 1982. Saifuddin Zuhri, 2001, Guruku Orang-Orang Dari Pesantren, Yogyakarta, 2001.
- 14 Compared to other sub-districts, Gudo, for instance, has only one pesantren, or Bandar Kedungmulyo with four pesantrens, or Kecamatan Perak which has twelve pesantrens. See Rekap Pendataan, 2003.

- 15 The educational system in Indonesia does not recognise the pesantren certificate for the purpose of pursuing further study in the formal schooling system, including tertiary education. This means that the pupils should also have a certificate from formal schooling institutions with the curriculum outlined by either the Ministry of Religious Affairs or the Ministry of National Education, apart from their pesantren education.
- 16 The great days celebrated after Ramadan fasting time. Within the Indonesian Muslim community, these days are also associated with the particular tradition of mudik (return back home), special food and special tradition of visiting each other.
- 17 See Lies Marcoes, "The Female Preacher as a Mediator in Religion: A Case Study in Jakarta and West Java", in Van Bemmelen et al. (eds), Women and Mediation in Indonesia, Leiden: KITLV Press, 1992.
- 18 In some areas in Java, the practice of child marriage is still common.
- 19 Interview on October 3, 2003 in Jombang.
- 20 This is in comparison to the normal conditions of pondoks in general and the pondok of male pupils at the same time. For their bathroom facilities, there were showers with beautiful ceramic tiles. Their rooms were large enough with modern and artistic ceramic floors. According to one of the kiai's immediate family, the construction of the building cost a lot of money until it was finally finished in 2003.
- 21 A title that signifies charisma and dignity.
- 22 Saifuddin Zuhri, 2001, Guruku Orang... p. 126.
- 23 I found one article written by Kiai Hasyim Asy'ary in a magazine, namely Soeara Moeslimin Indonesia, no date of publication, but it seems to have been published in the 1940s before Indonesian independence, the article was entitled "Keutamaan Bercocok Tanam" (the significance of land cultivation). Although in most references on his figure, it was rarely recorded that he was a farmer, as the Gunseikabu did, the article he published in the magazine will more or less identify his interest in the agriculture sector.
- 24 See Gunseikanbu, Orang Indonesia Yang Terkemuka di Jawa, Gadjah Mada University Press, Yogyakarta, 1986, p. 435.
- 25 Aboebakar, Sejarah Hidup K.H.A. Wahid Hasyim dan Karangan Tersiar, Panitia Buku Peringatan Alm. K.H.A Wahid Hasyim, Jakarta, 1957, p. 61.
- 26 The original location of the pesantren established by Kiai Asy'ary's family is still preserved, the pesantren itself was run by his descendant. Nevertheless, currently the pesantren is not well-known by non-local people as Pesantren Tebuireng. In my visit to the pesantren, the kiai's family said that only eight pupils live in the pesantren while the others are local pupils who come to learn Islamic sciences and return home afterwards. The original buildings from Kiai Asy'ary's period are still maintained, it was not far from the current location of the pesantren, within a quiet location with a small building resembling a mosque, where the graves of Kiai Asy'ary and his wife are located.
- 27 Adrian Vickers, A History of Modern Indonesia, Cambridge University Press, Cambridge, 2005, p. 55.
- 28 He was born in Bangkalan Madura in 1819 into a kiai family in Madura. He studied in at least four pesantrens in Java and Madura before departing to Mecca for further education as well as the ritual of pilgrimage. He was recorded as one of the pupils of Syaikh Nawâwî al-Bantani's (a celebrated ulama in Mecca who came from Java). Kiai Cholil Bangkalan was the master of several founding fathers of the pesantren in Java. Apart from Kiai Hasyim Asy'ary (founding father of Pesantren Tebuireng), there were Kiai Manaf Abd Karim (the founding father of Pesantren Lirboyo Kediri), Kiai Wahab Chasbullah (the leading kiai of Pesantren Tambak Beras Jombang), Kiai Bisri Syansury (the founding father of Pesantren Denanyar Jombang), Kiai Maksum (the - founding father of Pesantren Lasem, Rembang). He was among the most charismatic ulama figures in Indonesia at the end of nineteenth century and the first quarter of the twentieth century. When the NU was founded, Hasyim Asy'ary also sought for his 'approval' to support the idea. See Abdurrahman Mas'ud, Intelektual Pesantren: Perhelatan Agama dan Tradisi, LKIS, Yogyakarta, 2004, pp. 157-176.

- 29 Mahmud Yunus, Sejarah Pendidikan Islam di Indonesia, Hidakarya Agung, Jakarta, 1984, p. 234.
- 30 The ulamas who originally came from the Indonesian Archipelago.
- 31 He was born in Tremas, Pacitan, East Java, in 1868. When he was about six years old, his father took him to Mecca. By the end of 1870s, Machfudz returned to Indonesia, his father sent him to the pesantren of Kiai Saleh Darat in Semarang Central Java. Few years later, he decided to travel to Mecca again and never returned to Indonesia, passing away in Mecca in 1919. During his second time in Mecca, Machfudz was known as the master for several pupils coming from Southeast Asia, and particularly from Java. He was an industrious ulama, at least twenty of his works have been discovered by his descendants. Like Cholil al-Bangkalan, he was also a master for a great number of kiais in Java and Madura. See Abdurrahman Mas'ud, Intelektual Pesantren: Perhelatan Agama dan Tradisi, LKIS, Yogyakarta, 2004, pp. 135-156.
- 32 For the detail of Nawawi al-Bantani's biography, refer to the previous chapter on the author of Uqud al-Lujjayn.
- 33 Ahmad Khatib was born in Bukittinggi, West Sumatra in 1855. He went to Mecca, married a local woman and lived there for the rest of his life. He was appointed as an imam (leader) for the Safi'ite school of al-Haram mosque in Mecca. He was an instructor for some ulamas from the Archipelago, and Kiai Ahmad Dahlan, Kiai Hasyim Asy'ary were among his pupils. Deliar Noer, The Modernist Muslim Movement in Indonesia, 1900-1942, Oxford University Press, Singapore, New York, 1973, p. 38.
- 34 Aboebakar, Sejarah Hidup. p. 103.
- 35 Kiai Bisri membuka kelas khusus untuk santri-santri wanita , sesuatu yang belum pernah terjadi saat itu di dunia pesantren. Putri-putri tetangga dikumpulkan di belakang rumahnya untuk diajar mengaji. Langkah yang asing itu tidak luput dari pengamatan gurunya, Kiai Hasyim yang pada suatu hari memerlukan datang untuk melihat dengan mata kepala. Kiai Bisri tetap melanjutkan percobaannya itu, meskipun tidak izin specific dari gurunya, yang juga tidak melarangnya. Ketetapan hatinya agaknya merupakan perubahan besa pada Kiai Bisri. Sebelum itu tidak pernah melangkah apapun tanpa perkenan guru yang ditundukinya, sebagaimana kasus keenggannya untuk melibatkan diri dalam Syarikat Islam cabang Mekah. Bisa jadi, pembukaan kelas santri wanita telah terjadi perubahan pada diri Kiai Bisri sebagai buah kematangan sikap... The translation is mine. Said Budairy, "K.H. Bisri Syansuri: Tegar dengan Prinsip", Pesantren, I, October-December, 1986, p. 61.
- 36 See Kyai Abd. Aziz Masyhuri, "In Memoriam KH.M. Bisri Syansuri Pendiri Pondok Pesantren Mamba'ul Maarif dan Pendiri NU yang Terakhir Wafatnya", Risalah Akhir Sanah Pondok Pesantren Mamba'ul Ma'arif Denanyar Jombang, p. 7, n.d.
- 37 The fact that women are not encouraged to learn or few people believed that it was haram (religiously prohibited) was also mentioned by Nyai Abidah from Pesantren Seblak in the interview, referring to the case of women in her time.
- 38 Actually, Kwaron has four pesantrens instead of three; a new pesantren was established in 2003, namely al-Aqobah located not far from the campus of pesantren Seblak. Al-Aqobah also has a majelis taklim for local women, which is coordinated by the director of the pesantren. The educational system applied in that pesantren is different from those of the other three pesantrens in the area. Al-Aqobah stresses providing modern facilities, methods and system of education, although at the same time, the pesantren has adopted some traditional pesantren values.

- 39 Interview on October 2, 2003, in Jombang.
- 40 Kiai Maksum Ali was born in 1895, in Maskunambang Gresik. Kiai Maksum Ali was famous for his ability in astronomy, astrology, and mathematics. He wrote several books on Arabic grammatical rules, astrology, astronomy and mathematics. One of his books on Arabic grammatical rules, entitled al-Amsilât al-Taşrifîyyah, was still widely used as the textbook in some pesantrens and madrasahs across Indonesia until recently. For further information on the figure of Kiai Maksum Ali, see Maksoem Mackfoedz, 1986, "K.H. Ma'sum Ali Cendekiawan Muslim", Tebuireng, pp. 5-8.
- 41 There are two versions regarding the leadership of the pesantren after Kiai Maksum Ali's period. In a small note about Pesantren Salafiyah Seblak, based on Kiai Machfudz Anwar's and Nyai Abidah's story, the leadership of the pesantren after 1933 was taken over by the couple, but the version of Pesantren Salafiyah Syafiiyah claimed that the leadership of Pesantren Seblak after Kiai Maksum Ali's period was taken over by his wife, Nyai Khairiyah, until 1938, when she married for the second time, and then followed her husband to live in Mecca for nineteen years. Obviously, the second version, that it was Nyai Khoiriyah who took over the leadership of the pesantren after Kiai Maksum's period, dominates the discourse.
- 42 Traditional transportation, which is pulled by horse[s].
- 43 Lily Zakiyah Munir was born in 1950; she has an English educational background for her bachelor's degree, and did her master's degree in Holland.
- 44 Interview with Lily Zakiyah Munir in Jakarta on July 15, 2003. P3M sekarang ada program Islam emansipatoris, jaringan Islam emansipatoris itu intinya adalah mendekonstruksi paradigma memahami agama berangkat dari realita, nah ini mirip juga kita di Cep Des akan merancang program semacam itu, yang kita sebut adalah Islam transformatif, Islam transformatif ini kita mulai kecil-kecilan ya metoda memahami agama; Quran dan Hadist, tidak normative tapi berdasarkan realita, jadi caranya melalui diskusi-diskusi' Bahsul Masail'. The translation is mine.
- 45 Literally means a discussion on several issues or problems. It is a discussion on religious matters attended by kiais or ulamas to produce a religious legal interpretation and a recommendation from the Islamic perspective on particular issues. It has strong associations with the discussion generating fatwa (legal interpretation) within the NU organisation.
- 46 Assistant director, A. Nurul Fuad, Executive Secretary, Sudarpo Said, Financial manager, Farid, St Khadijah. Department of research, Feri Cokroaminoto, Department of library and developing the capacity of the unit, Rondi Zein and Chotibul Umam, Department of empowering and community advocacy, Phinky Hidayati, Department of information, documentation and publication: Alfisah Thoah.

Chapter 4

- 1 The earlier version of this chapter has been published in an edited book entitled Indonesian Islam in New Era: How Women Negotiate Their Muslim Identity, edited by Susan Blackburn et al, published by Monash University Press, 2008.
- 2 Aboebakar, Sejarah Hidup K.H.A. Wahid Hasyim dan Karangan Tersiar, Panitia Buku Peringatan Alm. K.H.A Wahid Hasyim, Jakarta, 1957.
- 3 See Ailsa Zainuddin, "Education in the Netherlands East Indies and The Republic of Indonesia", in R.J.W. Selleck (ed.), Melbourne Studies in Education, Melbourne University Press, Carlton Victoria, 1970.
- 4 See Joost Cote, 1992, Letters from Kartini: An Indonesian Feminist 1900-1904, Monash Asia Institute, Clayton Victori, 1992.

- 5 Zamakhsyari Dhofier, Tradisi Pesantren: Studi Tentang Pandangan Hidup Kiyai, Jakarta: LP3ES, 1982, p. 54.
- 6 See M.D. Zuhdy, "Nyai Khoiriyah Hasyim: Inovator Muslimah", Tebuireng, no. 1, May, 1986, pp. 44-45.
- 7 The couple had seven children, namely Hamnah, Abd. Jabar, Abidah, Ali, Jamilah, Mahmud, and Karimah. All of them died in infancy, except Abidah and Jamilah.
- 8 See Haidlor Ali Ahmad, "Kesetaraan Gender dan Pemberdayaan Perempuan di Pondok Pesantren", Penamas (Jurnal Penelitian Agama dan Kemasyarakatan), No. 36. 2000.
- 9 From her marriage to Kiai Muhaimin, Nyai Khoiriyah had three children, but all of them passed away in Mecca.
- 10 Azyumardi Azra, The Origins of Islamic Reformism in Southeast Asia: networks of Malay-Indonesian and Middle Eastern 'Ulamā' in the seventeenth and Eighteenth Centuries, Allen & Unwin, Crows Nest: N.S.W., 2004.
- 11 See Abdurrahman Mas'ud, Intelektual Pesantren: Perhelatan Agama dan Tradisi, LKIS, Yogyakarta, 2004.
- 12 Martin Van Bruinessen, "Mencari Ilmu dan Pahala di tanah Suci: Orang Nusantar Naik Haji", Ulumul Qur'an, VI II, No. 5, 1990, p. 42.
- 13 Interview with Bapak Muchsin Zuhdy, on September 25, 2003, in Jombang.
- 14 Interview with Bapak Muchsin Zuhdy, on September 25, 2003, in Jombang.
- 15 Aboebakar, Sejarah Hidup ... pp. 69.
- 16 Ibid., pp. 105.
- 17 ... Beberapa kiyai mengajar sendiri anak-anak perempuan mereka kitab-kitab tingkat atas dan tinggi. Nyai Khairiyah putrid K.H. Hasyim Asy'ary umpamanya, sangat dalam pengetahuannya dalam cabang-cabang pengetahuan Islam... The translation is mine. See Zamakhsyari Dhofier, Tradisi Pesantren... p. 54.
- 18 Interview with Nyai Abidah, on September 18, 2003, in Jombang.
- 19 Interview with Kiai Yusuf Hasyim, on September 25, 2003, in Jombang.
- 20 Interview with Ibu Machtumah, on October 11, 2003, in Jombang.
- 21 Interview on September 23, 2003, in Jombang.
- 22 Interview on October 14, 2003, in Jombang.
- 23 Afaf Lutfi Sayyid-Marsot, Women and Men in Late Eighteenth-century Egypt, University of Texas Press, USA, 1995, p. 11.
- 24 Abdurrahman Wahid, the grandson of Kiai Hasyim Asy'ary, the first son of Kiai Wahid Hasyim.
- 25 Interview with Sinta Nuriyah, on February 12, 2003, in Jakarta.
- 26 Azyumardi Azra, "Biografi Sosial-Intelektual Ulama Perempuan: Pemberdayaan Historiografi", in Jajat Burhannuddin (ed.), Ulama Perempuan Indonesia, PT. Gramedia Pustaka Utama dan PPIM, Jakarta, 2002, p. xxxvi.
- 27 Together with Nyai Khoiriyah, there were two other nyais, namely Nyai Fatimah and Nyai Machmudah Mawardi, appointed as members of Badan Syuriah PBNU at the same time.
- 28 The difference between PB Muslimat NU and PBNU is that the former is part of PBNU. To be appointed to PBNU means to deal with more than just Muslimat NU, because PBNU is an umbrella for the Muslimat NU (women NU's wing organisation), Fatayat NU (young women's NU wing organisation), IPNU (youth NU organisation), and other sections of NU. See Aboebakar, Sejarah Hidup ... pp. 105.
- 29 Interview with Ibu Nurlaili Rahmah, on September 19, 2003, in Jombang.
- 30 Interview with her former student on October 14, 2003, in Jombang.
- 31 In this regard, I can trace back one article written by Nyai Khoiriyah, entitled "Pokok-Pokok Tjeramah Pengertian antar Mazahib Dan Toleransinya" published by Gema Islam (Majalah Pengetahuan dan Kebudayaan), August 1962. In his article on "Nyai

- Khoiriyah: Inovator. Muslimah*", Muhsin Zuhdy said that Majalah Semesta in several numbers: no. 5 in 1980, no. 6 in 1981 and no. 1 in 1982 cover the figure of Nyai Khoiriyah, in which her interpretation of the Quranic verses on polygamy was also published. See Muhsin Zuhdy, "Nyai Khoiriyah: Inovator Muslimah", Tebuireng, no.1, May, 1986, p. 45.
- 32 See Madelon Djajadiningrat-Nieuwenhuis, Ibuisim and Priyayization: Path to Power?, in Elsbeth Locher-Scholten and Anke Niehof (eds), Indonesian Women in Focus: Past and Present Notions, Dordrecht-Holland: Foris Publication, 1987.
- 33 Interview with Nyai Abidah, on September 27, 2003, in Jombang.
- 34 Interview with Nyai Abidah, on September 18, 2003, in Jombang.
- 35 Interview with Nyai Abidah, on September 18, 2003, in Jombang.
- 36 Nyai Abidah was married to the family of Pesantren Pacul Gowang, Kiai Machfud was the son of Kiai Anwar. From this marriage, they had eleven children, Maksun (born in 1938), Hanna (born in 1942), Kyisah (born in 1945), Jarir (born in 1947), Lily Zakiyah (born in 1950), Abdul Halim (born in 1953), Anas Fauziah (born in 1956), Abdul Hakim (born in 1958), Sofia (born in 1962), Abd. Wahid (born in 1965) and Mariam Muhsinna (born in 1968).
- 37 Interview with Nyai Abidah, on September 27, 2003, in Jombang.
- 38 Interview with Nyai Abidah, September 27, 2003, in Jombang.
- 39 Interview with one of Nyai Abidah's former pupil on October 13, 2003.
- 40 Interview with Lily Zakiyah Munir, on July 15, 2003, in Jakarta.
- 41 Interview with Lily Zakiyah Munir, on July 15, 2003, in Jakarta.
- 42 Interview with Lily Zakiyah Munir, on July 15, 2003, in Jakarta.
- 43 This column is dedicated to those who seek religious legal interpretation (fatwa) or an answer from ulama regarding particular religious issues or matters.
- 44 I obtained this data from the documentation of the local village office.
- 45 To whom, according to Islamic law, they are not allowed to be married; such as father, brother, father-in-law, uncle.
- 46 Interview with Nyai Mahshunah, on October 8, 2003, in Jombang.
- 47 PPP was one of three political organisations that were sanctioned by the New Order Government. The others were Golkar (Golongan Karya) and PDI (Partai Demokrasi Indonesia). PPP was known as the Islamic party. Santri Muslim tended to choose this party, particularly under the New Order regime, when there was no PKB (Partai Kebangkitan Bangsa).
- 48 An organisation concerned with developing the quality of education.
- 49 Interview with Nyai Mahshunah on October 8, 2003, in Jombang.
- 50 From her marriage to Umar Faruq, the couple only have three daughters and no sons. One of her daughters graduated from the State Institute for Islamic Studies. She sometimes replaces Nyai Mahshunah's position in the pesantren, for instance, her role of leading the communal prayers of the students. Once, I was with the students for the communal prayer during the Ramadan time. Nyai Mahshunah who was supposed to lead the communal prayer was not there with us, but her daughter was present instead. She was requested by the forum to take up the position, which was supposed to be her mother's one, which she finally accomplished confidently and successfully.
- 51 Interview with Nyai Mahshuna, 20 October 2003.
- 52 See Anita Rahman, "Moslem Women's Organisations: Their Role in Attaining the Benefits of Development", in Mayling Oey Gardiner and Carla Bianpoen (eds), Indonesian Women: The Journey Continues, ANU, Canberra, 2000; Susan Blackburn, "Indonesian Islamic Women Enter the Political Arena", in Kultur, volume 2, number 2, 2002; Sukanti Suryochondro, "The development of Women's Movement in Indonesia", in Mayling Oey Gardiner and Carla Bianpoen (eds), Indonesian Women: The Journey Continues, ANU, Canberra, 2000.

- 53 Fatayat NU is the NU women's wing organisation for young women under 40 years old, whereas Muslimat NU is for those over 40 years old.
- 54 See Masdar F. Mas'udi, "Potensi Prubahan Gender di Lingkungan Umat Islam: Sebuah Pengalaman", in Syafiq Hasyim (ed.), Menakar Harga Perempuan, Mizan, Bandung, 1999, pp. 242-248.
- 55 As-Saddeka Arebi as quoted by Camilia Fawzi El-Solh and Judy Mabro, "Introduction: Islam and Muslim Women", in El-Solh, Camilia Fawzi and Judy Mabro (eds), Muslim Women's Choices: Religious Belief Social Reality, Providence RI: Berg, 1994, p. 16-7.
- 56 Interview with Nyai Abidah, on September 18, 2003, in Jombang.
- 57 Interview with Nyai Mahshunah, on September 20, 2003, in Jombang.
- 58 See Iik Arifin Mansurnoor, Islam in an Indonesian world: ulama of Madura, Gadjah Mada University Press, Yogyakarta, 1990.
- 59 Dawam Rahardjo, Pergulatan Dunia Pesantren: Membangun dari Bawah, P3M, Jakarta, 1985, p. 15.
- 60 Interview with Nyai Abidah, on September 27, 2003.
- 61 Interview with Lily Zakiyah Munir, on July 15, 2003.
- 62 Interview with Lily Zakiyah Munir, on July 15, 2003.
- 63 Interview with Nyai Mahshunah on September 20, 2003.
- 64 Interview with Nyai Mahshunah, on October 8, 2003.
- 65 Yvonne Y. Haddad, "Islam, Women and Revolution in Twentieth-Century Arab Thought", in Yvonne Yazbeck and Ellison Banks Findly (eds) Women, Religion and Social Change, State University of New York Press, Albany, 1985, pp. 275-306.
- 66 Interview with Lily Zakiyah Munir, on July 15, 2003.
- 67 Amal Rassam, "Women and Domestic Power in Morocco", International Journal of Middle East Studies, No. 12. 1980, p. 170.
- 68 Asma Afsaruddin, "Introduction" in Asma Afsaruddin (ed.) Hermeneutics and Honor: Negotiating Female "Public" Space in Islamic/ate Societies, Centre for Middle Eastern Studies of Harvard University, Harvard University Press, Cambridge etc, 1999, p. 6.
- 69 Afsaruddin, Asma. 1999, "Introduction"... p. 19
- 70 Mary Elaine Hegland, "The Power of Paradox in Muslim Women's Majales: North-West Pakistani Politics, Ethnicity, and Gender" in Saliba et al. (eds), Gender, Politics and Islam, University of Chicago Press, Chicago and London, 2002, p. 96.
- 71 The common definition of aurat understood by the vast majority of Muslims is to cover all of the body except the hands and the face. To some extent, some ulamas say it also includes the feet.
- 72 Interview with Nyai Mahshunah, on September 20, 2003, in Jombang.

Chapter 5

- 1 Santriwati is a particular term used for female pupils of pesantren.
- 2 The earlier version of this chapter has been published in Asia Pacific Journal of Education in 2007 in its special edition on Muslim's education.
- 3 From research conducted by P3M on 500 pesantrens in Indonesia, almost all of the pesantrens researched basically stated that in terms of the output, a pesantren was established to produce a devoted Muslim or kiai/ulama. This is an indication of how pesantren education is in fact projected to produce future ulama or religious leaders. See Mas'udi Pesantren Masa Datang dan Tiga Tipe Kyainya, in Dawam Rahardjo, Islam Indonesia Menatap Masa Depan, P3M, Jakarta, 1989, p. 200.
- 4 Kompas, September 9, 2002.
- 5 See Fatima Mernissi, The Harem Within, Bantam Books, Toronto and Sydney, 1995.

- 6 See M. Halstead, Radical Feminism, Islam and the Single Sex- School Debate, Gender and Education, vol. 3, no. 1, 1988, pp. 263-78.
- 7 Kaye Haw, Educating Muslim Girls: Shifting Discourse, Open University Press, Bunkingham – Philadelphia, 1998, p. 59.
- 8 Ayumardi Azra, “Dalam Sejarah Pendidikan Islam: Tidak Ada Segregasi Laki-Laki dan Perempuan”, Swara Rahima, No. 7, III, Maret, 2003, p. 10.
- 9 mahram is the group of people for whom it is unlawful for a woman to marry due to marital or blood relationships.
- 10 Husein Muhammad (2002).
- 11 Personal communication, 30 January 2003.
- 12 Yvonne Y. Haddad, “Islam, Women and Revolution in Twentieth-Century Arab Thought”, in Yvonne Yazbeck and Ellison Banks Findly (eds.) Women, Religion and Social Change, State University of New York Press, Albany, 1985, p. 282.
- 13 Lila Dubee, Women and kinship: comparative perspectives on gender in South and South-East Asia, United Nations University Press, Tokyo, 1997.
- 14 See Sylva Frisk, Submitting to God: Women and Islam in Urban Malaysia, NIAS Press, Denmark, 2009, p. 7.
- 15 Kathryn Robinson and Sharon Bessel (eds), “Introduction”, Women in Indonesia: Gender, Equity and Development, Institute of South East Asia Studies, Singapore, 2002.
- 16 Kathryn Robinson, “Indonesian Women from Orde Baru to Reformasi”, in Louise Edwards and Mina Roces (eds.), Women in Asia: Tradition, Modernity and Globalisation, Allen & Unwin, Australia, 2000, p. 141.
- 17 Achmad Muthaliin, Bias Gender dalam Pendidikan, first edition, Muhammadiyah University Press, Surakarta, 2001.
- 18 Judith Okely, “Privileges, Schooled and Finished: Boarding Education for Girls”, in Shirley Ardener (ed.), Women and Space: Ground Rules and Social Maps, London: Croom Helm, 1981, p. 109.
- 19 Martin Van Bruinessen, Kitab Kuning.
- 20 Ibid. Azyumardi Azra, The Origins of Islamic Reformism.
- 21 Martin Van Bruinessen, Kitab Kuning, p. 112. Sahal Mahfudz, “Islam dan Hak Reproduksi Perempuan”. Husein Muhammad, “Pesantren and The Issue”.
- 22 Husein Muhammad, “Pesantren and The Issue”, p. 72.
- 23 Sahal Mahfudz, “Islam dan Hak Reproduksi Perempuan”.
- 24 The authoritative rights of her father or other male guardians in this regard.
- 25 [D]i balik beberapa pandangan yang cukup empowering (memberdayakan) kaum perempuan, bukan berarti dalam fiqh tidak ada persoalan tentang perempuan. Misalnya dalam kasus menentukan pasangan hidup, perempuan masih terhadang dengan konsep ijbar (paksa). Dalam mengakses informasi, perempuan masih terstigma dengan anggapan masyarakat bahwa perempuan tidak usah mendapat informasi dari dunia luar sebab perannya adalah dalam rumah). The translation is mine. Sahal Mahfudz, “Islam dan Hak Reproduksi Perempuan”, p. 118.
- 26 During my fieldwork it was clear that the pesantren with no male pupils did not use this type of the kitab kuning.
- 27 Masdar F. Mas’udi, “Potensi Perubahan Gender di Lingkungan Umat Islam: Sebuah Pengalaman”, in Syafiq Hasyim (ed.), Menakar Harga Perempuan, Mizan, Bandung, 1999, p. 244.
- 28 Masdar F. Mas’udi, “Perempuan di antara”.
- 29 Ibid.
- 30 Masdar F. Mas’udi, “Perempuan di antara Lembaran Kitab Kuning”, in Lies Marcoes and Johan Hendrik Meuleman (eds), Wanita Islam Indonesia dalam Kajian Tekstual dan Kontekstual, Jakarta: INIS, 1993 pp. 155-163.
- 31 Martin Van Bruinessen, Kitab Kuning, p. 175.

- 32 Although the name of Jamaluddin, the son of Syaikh Arsyad al-Banjary of South Kalimantan, appears on the cover of this kitab kuning, according to Martin (1999: 177), the local tradition has it that the real author was Jamaluddin's niece, Fatimah.
- 33 Martin Van Bruinessen, Kitab Kuning.
- 34 Abdurrahman Wahid, "Islam dan Hak Asasi Manusia", in Lily Zakiyah Munir, Memposisikan Kodrat, Mizan, Bandung, 1999, p. 39.
- 35 See Daniel, S. Lev, op.cit.
- 36 Husein Muhammad, "Kajian Atas Kitab", p. 96.
- 37 C. Snouck Hurgronje, Mekka in the latter, pp. 268-269.
- 38 Martin Van Bruinessen, Tarekat Naqsyabandiah di Indonesia: Survei Historis, Geografis dan Sosiologis, Mizan, Bandung, 1992.
- 39 Mustofa Bisri, "Ini 'Uqûd al-Lujjâyn Baru: Ini Baru 'Uqûd al-Lujjâyn", in Sinta Nuriyah A.Wahid et al, Wajah Baru Relasi Suami Istri: Telaah Kitab 'Uqûd al-Lujjâyn, LKIS, Yogyakarta, 2001, p. xi.
- 40 ... [D]alam memahami (baca: mengarifi) suatu karya (ilmiah atau bukan, kitab kuning ataupun buku putih) selain kita mesti melihat metode yang dipakai dalam menggarap karya, latarbelakang pemikiran penulisnya, kita tidak boleh melupakan setting pada saat karya itu digarap. Seperti diketahui, Imam Nawawi menulis Uqûd al-Lujjâyn sekitar tahun 1294 H, ketika beliau berusia kuranglebih 64 tahun, sudah lebih dari seabad yang lalu. Tanpa melihat, dimana beliau hidup saat itu, hanya melihat waktunya saja, rasanya kita bisa memaklumi-bahkan mungkin tidak bias membayangkan lain dari-apa yang Imam Nawawi tulis itu. Apalagi bila kita ingat beliau menulis Uqûd al-Lujjâyn menggunakan mtode penukilan dari ulama sebelumnya. Bayangkan, bila di abad kita sekarang ini saja, persoalan gender masih menjadi masalah hak kaum perempuan masih belum dihargai sebagaimana mestinya, apa pula keadaanya seabad yang lalu? The translation is mine.
- 41 Zamakhsyari Dhofier, Tradisi Pesantren: Studi Tentang Pandangan Hidup Kiyai, LP3ES, Jakarta, 1982.
- 42 Masdar F. Mas'udi, "Perempuan di antara Lembaran Kitab Kuning", in Lies Marcoes and Johan Hendrik Meuleman (eds), Wanita Islam Indonesia dalam Kajian Tekstual dan Kontekstual, INIS, Jakarta, 1993, pp. 155-163.
- 43 Mahfudz, Sahal, "Islam dan Hak Reproduksi Perempuan: Perspektif Fiqih", in Syafiq Hasyim (ed.), Menakar Harga Perempuan, Mizan, Bandung, 1999, pp. 113-122.
- 44 Husein Muhammad, "Pesantren and The Issue of Gender Relation", Kultur (The Indonesian Journal for Muslim Cultures), Volume 2, Number 2, 2002, hal. pp. 63-81.
- 45 Anik Farida, 2004, "Wacana Gender di Pesantren", in Penamas (Penelitian Agama Kemasyarakatan), Volume XVII No. 1, pp. 20-35.
- 46 Kitab Akhlaqul Banat, p. 17.
- 47 Ibid.
- 48 Kitab Akhlaqul Banat, p. 19.
- 49 Anik Farida, 2004, "Wacana Gender di Pesantren", in Penamas (Penelitian Agama Kemasyarakatan), Volume XVII No. 1, pp. 20-35.
- 50 She is the wife of Abdurrahman Wahid, the fourth president of the Indonesian Republic. She graduated from a pesantren for girls, al-Fatimiyyah Bahrul Ulum Tambak Beras. Currently, she is the director of the NGO PUAN Amal Hayati, concerned with the issues of pesantrens and women's empowerment.
- 51 Interview on September 2, 2003.
- 52 Interview with Lily Zakiyah Munir, on July 15, 2003, in Jakarta.
- 53 The Ramadan schedule for the year 2003 of Pesantren Tebuireng and Pesantren Madrasatul Quran.
- 54 Sabine A.M. Kuyper, 1993, "Profil Organisasi Wanita Islam Indonesia" in Lies Marcoes and Johan Hendrik Meuleman (eds), Wanita Islam Indonesia dalam Kajian Tekstual dan Kontekstual, Jakarta: INIS, and Farha Ciciek, 1999, "Idealnya Peran

- Perempuan Sebagai Ibu dan Istri” Menelusuri Problem Perempuan di Sebuah Komunitas Revivalis Islam”, Tashwirul Afkar, no. 5, pp. 35-40.
- 55 Personal communication, 14 November 2003.
- 56 Personal communication, 14 November 2003.
- 57 Personal communication, 23 October 2003.
- 58 Personal communication, 2 November 2003.
- 59 Personal communication, 29 October 2003.
- 60 See Sabine A. M. Kuyper, 1993, “Profil Organisasi Wanita Islam Indonesia” in Lies Marcoes and Johan Hendrik Meuleman (eds), Wanita Islam Indonesia dalam Kajian Tekstual dan Kontekstual, Jakarta: INIS.
- 61 Interview with Nyai Ummu Salma, 20 January, 2003.
- 62 Lies Marcoes, 1992, “The Female Preacher as a Mediator in Religion: A Case Study in Jakarta and West Java”, in Van Bemmelen et al. (eds.), Women and Mediation in Indonesia, Leiden: KITLV Press, p.212.
- 63 Michelle Zimbalist Rosaldo and Louise Lamphere, 1974, Women, Culture and Society, Stanford California: Stanford University Press. p. 12.
- 64 Personal communication, 29 October 2003.
- 65 Madelon Nieuwenhuis, 1987, “Ibuisim and Priyayization: Path to Power?”, in Elsbeth Locher-Scholten and Anke Niehof (eds.), Indonesian Women in Focus: Past and Present Notions, Dordrecht-Holland: Foris Publication, p. 44.

Bibliography

Articles

- Abdullah, Taufik, "Modernization in the Minangkabau World: West Sumatra in the Early Decades of the Twentieth Century" in Claire Holt (ed.), Culture and Politics in Indonesia, Cornell University Press, Ithaca and London, 1972, pp. 179-245.
- Abdullah, Taufik, "Kilasan Sejarah Pergerakan Wanita Islam di Indonesia" in Lies Marcoes and Johan Hendrik Meuleman (eds.), Wanita Islam Indonesia dalam Kajian Tekstual dan Kontekstual, INIS, Jakarta, 1993, pp. 71-82.
- Abdurrahman, Moeslim, "Mengenal Ciri Pesantren di Jawa Timur", in Pesantren; Profil Kiyai, Pesantren dan Madrasah, Warta PDIA no. 2, September, 1981, pp. 1-39.
- Abu-Lughod, Lila, "Feminist Longings and Postcolonial Conditions" in Lila Abu-Lughod (ed.), Remaking Women: Feminism and Modernity in the Middle East, Princeton, Princeton University Press, New Jersey, 1998, pp. 3-31.
- Afsaruddin, Asma, "Introduction" in Asma Afsaruddin (ed.) Hermeneutics and Honor: Negotiating Female "Public" Space in Islamic/ate Societies, Centre for Middle Eastern Studies of Harvard University, Harvard University Press, Cambridge etc., 1999, pp. 1-28.
- Ahmad, Haidlor Ali, "Kesetaraan Gender dan Pemberdayaan Perempuan di Pondok Pesantren", Penamas (Jurnal Penelitian Agama dan Kemasyarakatan), No. 36, 2000, pp. 51-61.
- Ahmad, Haidlor Ali, "Cepdes Pada Awal Bediri di PP al-Machfudz Seblak dan Kiprahnya dalam Pendidikan Politik Masyarakat dan Pemberdayaan Civil Society", in Penamas (Penelitian Agama Kemasyarakatan), Volume XVII No. 1, 2004, pp. 36-54.
- Ahmed, Leila, "Early Islam and the Position of Women: The Problem of Interpretation" in Nikki R. Keddie and Beth Baron (eds.), Women in Middle Eastern History: Shifting Boundaries in Sex and Gender, Yale University Press, New Haven and London, 1991, pp. 58-73.
- Alhadar, Ivan, "Pesantren Between Tradition and Industrial-Urban Challenge in Manfred Oepen and Wolfgang Karcher (eds.), The impact of Pesantren in Education and Community Development in Indonesia, Friedrich Naumann Stiftung: Indonesian Society for Pesantren and Community Development 9P3M): Technical University Berlin, Jakarta, 1998, pp. 99-109.
- Aly, Ainal Mardhiah, "Pergerakan Wanita di Aceh Masa Lampau Sampai Kini", in Ismail Suny (ed.), Bunga Rampai tentang Aceh, Penerbit Bhratara Karya Aksara, Jakarta, 1980.
- Anderson, Benedict R., "The Idea of Power in Javanese Culture" in Claire Holt (ed.), Culture and Politics in Indonesia, Ithaca and London: Cornell University Press, 1972, pp. 1-69.
- Anwar, Zainah, "What Islam, Whose Islam: Sisters in Islam and the Struggle for Women's Rights," in Robert W. Hefner (ed.) The Politics of Multiculturalism: Pluralism and Citizenship in Malaysia, Singapore, and Indonesia, Honolulu: University of Hawai'i Press. 2000, pp. 227-252.
- Arivia, Gadis, "Politik Susu Pendobrakan Bidang Politik", Jurnal Perempuan, Jakarta: Yayasan Jurnal Perempuan, 1999, p. 7-18.

- Azra, Azyumardi, "Dalam Sejarah Pendidikan Islam: Tidak Ada Segregasi Laki-Laki dan Perempuan", Swara Rahima, No. 7, III, Maret, 2003, pp. 9-13.
- Azra, Azyumardi, "Biografi Sosial-Intelektual Ulama Perempuan: Pemberdayaan Historiografi", in Jajat Burhannuddin (ed.), Ulama Perempuan Indonesia, Jakarta: PT. Gramedia Pustaka Utama dan PPIIM, 2002, pp. xxi-xxxviii.
- Baidlowi, Aisyah Hamid, "Profil Organisasi Wanita Islam: Studi Kasus Muslimat NU", in Lies Marcoes and Johan Hendrik Meuleman (eds.), Wanita Islam Indonesia dalam Kajian Tekstual dan Kontekstual, INIS, Jakarta, 1993, pp. 83-95.
- Baried, Baroroh, "Islam dan Modernisasi Wanita Indonesia", in Taufik Abdullah and Sharon Siddique (eds.), Tradisi dan Kebangkitan Islam di Asia Tenggara, LP3ES, Jakarta, 1989.
- Barton, Greg and Greg Fealy (eds.), "Introduction", in Nahdlatul Ulama, Traditional Islam and Modernity in Indonesia, Monash Asia Institute, Clayton, 1996, pp. xix-xxvi.
- Bemmelen, Sita van, "Jender dan Pembanguna: Apakah yang Baru?", in T. O. Ithromi, (ed.), Kajian Wanita dalam Pembangunan, Yayasan Obor Indonesia, Jakarta: 1995, pp. 175-226.
- Berninghausen, Jutta and Birgit Kerstan, "The Socio-Economic Situation of Rural Women: A Case Study from Java" in Manfred Oepen and Wolfgang Karcher (eds.), The impact of Pesantren in Education and Community Development in Indonesia, Friedrich Naumann Stiftung: Indonesian Society for Pesantren and Community Development (P3M): Technical Unversity Berlin, Jakarta, 1998, pp. 36-43.
- Bianca J. Smith and Saipul Hamdi published an article on "The Politics of Female Leadership, in Nahdlatul Wathan Pesantren", Lombok Eastern Indonesia in International Journal of Pesantren Studies Vol. 3, Number 1, 2009, pp. 1-28.
- Bianpoen, Carla, "The Family Welfare Movement: A Blessing or a Burden?", in Mayling Oey Gardiner and Carla Bianpoen (eds.), Indonesian Women: The Journey Continues, ANU, Canberra, 2000, pp. 66-94.
- Bisri, Mustofa, "Ini 'Uqud al-Lujjayn' Baru: Ini Baru 'Uqud al-Lujjayn'", in Sinta Nuriyah A. Wahid et al, Wajah Baru Relasi Suami Istri: Telaah Kitab 'Uqud al-Lujjayn, LKIS, Yogyakarta, 2001, pp. ix-xi.
- Blackburn, Susan, "Western Feminist Observe Asian Women: An Example from the Dutch East Indies", in Jean G. Taylor (ed.), Women Creating Indonesia: The First Fifty Years, Monash Asia Institute, Australia, 1997, pp. 1-21.
- Blackburn, Susan, "Indonesian Islamic women Enter the Political Arena", in Kultur, volume 2, number 2, 2002, pp. 21-45.
- Bodman, Herbert L. and Nayereh Tohidi (eds.), "Introduction", in Herbert L. Bodman and Nayereh Tohidi (eds.), Women in Muslim Societies: Diversity Within Unity, Lynne Rienner Publishes, London, 1998, pp. 1-18.
- Bruinessen, Martin van, "Mencari Ilmu dan Pahala di tanah Suci: Orang Nusantar Naik Haji", Ulumul Qur'an, VI II, No. 5, 1990, pp. 42-49.
- Bruinessen, Martin van, Traditions for the Future: The Reconstruction of Traditionalist Discourse Within NU, in Greg Barton and Greg Fealy, Nahdlatul Ulama, Traditional Islam and Modernity in Indonesia, Asia Monash Intitute, Clayton, 1996, pp. 163-189.
- Buchori, Mochtar, "Pendidikan Islam di Indonesia: Problema Masa Kini dan Perspektif Masa Depan", in Muntaha Azhari and Abdul Mun'im Saleh (eds.), Islam Indonesia Menatap Masa Depan, P3M, Jakarta, 1989, pp. 178-198.
- Budairy, Said, "K.H. Bisri Syansuri: Tegar dengan Prinsip", Pesantren, I, October, December, 1986, pp. 54-67.
- Budianta, Melani, "Suara Ibu Peduli: Panggilan Nurani Warga", Jurnal Perempuan, Jakarta: Yayasan Jurnal Perempuan, 1999, pp. 2-6.
- Bush, Robin L., "Wacana Perempuan di Lingkungan NU: Sebuah Perdebatan Mencari Bentuk", Tashwirul Afkar, no. 5, 1999, pp. 24-33.

- Ciciek, Farha, "Idealnya Peran Perempuan Sebagai Ibu dan Istri" Menelusuri Problem Perempuan di Sebuah Komunitas Revivalis Islam", Tashwirul Afkar, no. 5, 1999, pp. 35-40.
- Coloun, C., "Women, Islam and Baraka" in C. Coulon and D. Cruise O' Brien (eds.), Charisma and Brotherhood in African Islam, Clarendon Press, Oxford, 1988, pp. 6-13.
- Dahlan, Muhammad, "Sholihah A. Wahid Hasyim: Teladan Kaum Perempuan Nahdliyin" in Jajat Burhanuddin (ed.). Ulama Perempuan Indonesia. Jakarta: PT. Gramedia Pustaka Utama, 2002, pp. 100-137.
- Danielson, Virginia, "Moving toward Public Space: Women and Musical Performance in Twentieth-century Egypt", in Afsaruddin (ed.), Hermeneutics and Honor: Negotiating Female "Public" Space in Islamic/ate Societies, Centre for Middle Eastern Studies of Harvard University, Harvard University Press, Cambridge etc., 1999, pp. 116-139.
- Daud, Marwah Ibrahim, "Perempuan Indonesia Pemimpin Masa depan? Mengapa Tidak?", in Mely G. Tan (ed.), Perempuan Indonesia Pemimpin Masa Depan?, Third Edition, Pustaka Sinar Harapan, Jakarta, 1996, pp. 13-19.
- De Stuers, Cora Vreede, "The Life of Rankayo Rahmah el-Yunusiya: The facts and The Image", in Elsbeth Locher-Scholten and Anke Niehof (eds.), Indonesian Women in Focus: Past and Present Notions, Foris Publication, Dordrecht-Holland, 1987, pp. 52-57.
- Dhofier, Zamakhsyari, "Kinship and Marriage among the Javanese Kyai", Indonesia, vol. 29, 1980, pp. 296-299.
- Dzuhayatin, Siti Ruhaini, "Gender (Sebuah Perspektif Islami)", in Sekretariat Bersama Perempuan Yogyakarta (eds.), Merekonstruksi Realitas dengan Perspektif Gender, SBPY, Yogyakarta, 1997, pp. 275-282.
- Dzuhayatin, Siti Ruhaini, "Gender and Pluralism in Indonesia", in Robert W. Hefner (ed.), The Politics of Multiculturalism: Pluralism and Citizenship in Malaysia, Singapore, and Indonesia, University of Hawaii Press, Honolulu, 2001, pp. 253-267.
- El-Solh, Camilia Fawzi and Judy Mabro, "Introduction: Islam and Muslim Women", in El-Solh, Camilia Fawzi and Judy Mabro (eds.), Muslim Women's Choices: Religious Belief Social Reality, Providence, RI: Berg, 1994.
- Evers-Rosander, Eva, "Women and Muridsm in Senegal: The case of the Mam Diarra Bouso Daira in Mbacke", in Karin Ask and Marit Tjomsland (eds.), Women and Islamization: Contemporary of Discourse on Gender Relations, Berg, Oxford and Newyork, 1998, pp. 147-176.
- Fakih, Mansour, "Merekonstruksi Realitas dengan Perspektif Gender: Sebuah Pengantar", in Sekretariat Bersama Perempuan Yogyakarta (eds.), Merekonstruksi Realitas dengan Perspektif Gender, SBPY, Yogyakarta, 1997, pp. 1-22.
- Farida, Anik, "Wacana Gender di Pesantren", in Penamas (Penelitian Agama Kemasyarakatan), Volume XVII No. 1, 2004, pp. 20-35.
- Fayuni, Badriyah and Alai Najib, "Makhluk yang Paling Mendapat Perhatian Nabi: Perempuan dalam Hadist", in Ali Muhannif, Perempuan dalam Literatur Islam Klasik, PT. Gramedia Pustaka Utama, Jakarta, 2002, pp. 44-100.
- Fealy, Greg, "Wahab Chasbullah, Traditionalism and the Political Development of Nahdlatul Ulama", In Greg Barton and Greg Fealy (eds.), Nahdlatul Ulama, Traditional Islam and Modernity in Indonesia, Monash Asia Institute, Clayton, 1996, pp. 1-41.
- Feillard, Andree, "Traditionalist Islam and The State in Indonesia: The Road to Legitimacy and Renewal" in Robert W. Hefner, Islam in an era of nation-states: politic and religious renewal in Muslim Southeast Asia, University of Hawaii Press, USA, 1997, pp. 129-126.
- Feillard, Andree, "Potensi Perubahan Relasi Gender di Lingkungan Umat Islam: Sebuah Proyeksi dan Pemaparan Data", in Syafiq Hasyim (ed.), Menakar Harga Perempuan, Mizan, Bandung, 1999, pp. 221-241.

- Fernea, Robert A. and Elizabet W. Fernea, "Variation in Religious Observance among Islamic Women" in Keddie (ed.), Scholars, Saints, and Sufis: Muslim Religious Institutions in the Middle East Since 1500, University of California Press, Berkeley, Los Angeles, London, 1972, pp. 385-401.
- Florida, Nancy K., "Sex Wars: Writing Gender Relations in Nineteenth-Century Java", in Jane L. Sears (ed.), Fantasizing the Feminine in Indonesia, Duke University Press, Durham and London, 1996.
- Gardiner, Mayling Oey and Sulastri, "Continuity, Change and Women in a Man's World", in Mayling Oey Gardiner and Carla Bianpoen (eds.), Indonesian Women: The Journey Continues, ANU, Canberra, 2000, pp. 1-23.
- Haddad, Yvonne Y., "Islam, Women and Revolution in Twentieth-Century Arab Thought", in Yvonne Yazbeck and Ellison Banks Findly (eds.), Women, Religion and Social Change, State University of New York Press, Albany, 1985, pp. 275-306.
- Haddad, Yvonne Y., "Islam and Gender: Dilemmas in the Changing Arab World" in Yvonne Yazbeck Haddad and John L. Esposito (eds.), Islam, Gender, and Social Change, Oxford University Press, New York and Oxford, 1998, pp. 1-29.
- Hasyim, Syafiq et al., "Gerakan Perempuan dalam Islam: Perspektif Kesejarahan Kontemporer", in Tashwirul Afkar, No. 5, 1999, pp. 2-11.
- Hasyim, Yusuf, "Model Pendidikan Pesantren: Tinjauan Sistemik", in Tebuireng, No. 5, September, 1986, pp. 36-37.
- Hatley, Barbara, "Theatrical Imagery and Gender Ideology in Java," in Atkinson, Jane Moning and Shelly Errington (eds.), Power and Difference: Gender in Island Southeast Asia, Stanford University Press, Stanford, 1990, pp. 177-07.
- Hefner, Robert W., "Introduction: The Politics and Cultures of Islamic Education in Southeast Asia" in Robert W. Hefner (ed.), Making Modern Muslim: The Politics of Islamic Education in Southeast Asia, University of Hawaii Press, Honolulu, 2009a, pp. 1-54.
- Hefner, Robert W., "Islamic Schools, Social Movements, and Democracy in Indonesia" in Robert W. Hefner (ed.), Makin Modern Muslim: The Politics of Islamic Education in Southeast Asia, University of Hawaii Press, Honolulu, 2009b, pp. 55-105.
- Hegland, Mary Elaine, "The Power of Paradox in Muslim Women's Majales: North-West Pakistani Politics, Ethnicity, and Gender" in Therese Saliba et al. (eds.), Gender, Politics and Islam, University of Chicago Press, Chicago and London, 2002, pp. 95-132.
- Hosen, Ibrahim, "Peranan Wanita dalam Majelis Ulama", in Mimbar Ulama no. 39, April/Mei, 1980.
- Hull, Valerie L., "Women in Java's Rural Middle Class Progress or Regress" in Penny van Esterik, Women of Southeast Asia, Centre for Southeast Asian Studies, Northern Illinois University, 1996, pp. 78-93.
- Jahroni, Jajang, "Haji Rangkyo Rasuna Said: Pejuang Politik dan Penulis Pergerakan", in Jajat Burhanuddin, Ulama Perempuan Indonesia, PT Gramedia Pustaka Utama, Jakarta, 2002, pp. 68-99.
- Jayawardena, Women and Kinship in Aceh Besar, Northern Sumatra, Ethnology, Vol. 16, No. 1 (Jan., 1977), pp. 21-38.
- Kamalkhani, Zahra, "Reconstruction of Islamic Knowledge and Knowing: A case of Islamic Practices among Women in Iran" in Karin Ask and Marit Tjomsland, Women and Islamization: Contemporary Dimensions of Discourse on Gender Relation, Berg, Oxford, 1998, 177-193.
- Kandiyoti, Deniz, "Bargaining with Patriarchy", Gender and Society, Vol. 2, No. 3, 1988, pp. 274-289.

- Karcher, Wolfgang, "Pesantren and Government Schools – How Do They Fit Together?", in Manfred Oepen and Wolfgang Karcher (eds.), The impact of Pesantren in Education and Community Development in Indonesia, Friedrich Naumann Stiftung: Indonesian Society for Pesantren and Community Development (P3M): Technical University Berlin, Jakarta, 1988, pp. 183-196.
- Kearney, Mary-Louise, "Overview: from Rhetoric to Reality", in Mary Louise Kearney (ed.), Women, Power, and the Academy: From Rhetoric to Reality, Berghahn Books, New York and Oxford, 2000, pp. 1-17.
- Keeler, Ward, "Speaking of Gender in Java" in Atkinson, Jane Moring and Shelly Errington (eds.), Power and Difference: Gender in Island Southeast Asia, Stanford University Press, Stanford, 1990a.
- Keeler, Ward, "Speaking of Gender in Java" in Atkinson, Jane Moring and Shelly Errington (eds.), Power and Difference: Gender in Island Southeast Asia, Stanford University Press, Stanford, 1990b, pp. 127-152.
- Kimin, Zamzami, "Sekelumit Kenang-Kenangan Terhadap Aktivitas Mendiang Kak Rahmah El-Yunisiyah (1900-1969)", in Anonymous, Ghalia Indonesia, n.d. Peringatan 55 Tahun Diniyah Putri Padang, Jakarta, 1979.
- Kuntowijoyo, "Arah Pengembangan Organisasi Wanita Islam Indonesia: Kemungkinan-Kemungkinannya", in Lies Marcoes and Johan Hendrik Meuleman (eds.), Wanita Islam Indonesia dalam Kajian Tekstual dan Kontekstual, INIS, Jakarta, 1993, pp. 129-134.
- Kusujarti, Siti, "Hubungan Gender dalam Masyarakat Jawa in Abdullah, Irwan (ed.) Sangkan Paran Gender, Pustaka Pelajar, Yogyakarta, 2003, pp. 82-100.
- Kuyper, Sabine A.M., "Profil Organisasi Wanita Islam Indonesia" in Lies Marcoes and Johan Hendrik Meuleman (eds.), Wanita Islam Indonesia dalam Kajian Tekstual dan Kontekstual, INIS, Jakarta, 1993.
- Landle, Joan B., "Further Thoughts on the Public/Private Distinction, Journal of Women History, 15, 2, 2003, pp. 28-39.
- Lev, Daniel S., "On the Other Hand?", in Laurie J. Sears (ed.), Fantasizing the Feminine in Indonesia, Duke University Press, Durham and London, 1996, pp. 191-206.
- Locher-Scholten, Elsbeth and Anke Niehof (eds.), "Introduction", in Locher-Scholten and Niehof (eds.), Indonesian Women in Focus: Past and Present Notions, Foris Publication, Dordrecht-Holland, 1987, pp. 1-9.
- MacFarland, Susan, "Women and Revolution in Indonesia", in Mary Ann Tetreault (ed.), Women and Revolution in Africa, Asia and the New World, University of South Carolina Press, pp. 192-210.
- Machali, Rochayah, "Women and the Concept of Power in Indonesia", in Susan Blackburn (ed.), Love, Sex, and Power, Asia Monash Institute, Clayton, 2001.
- Mahfoed, Maksoem, "K.H. Hasyim Asy'ary Sebagai Ulama dan Pejuang", Tebuireng, perdana April, 1986a, pp. 51-55.
- Mahfoed, Maksum, "K.H. Ma'sum Ali: Cendekiawan Muslim", Tebuireng, no. 1, May, 1986b, pp. 5-8.
- Mahfudz, Sahal, "Islamic Social Change: Pesantren and Community Development", in Manfred Oepen and Wolfgang Karcher (eds.), The impact of Pesantren in Education and Community Development in Indonesia, Friedrich Naumann Stiftung: Indonesian Society for Pesantren and Community Development (P3M): Technical University Berlin, Jakarta, 1998, pp. 76-82.
- Mahfudz, Sahal, "Islam dan Hak Reproduksi Perempuan: Perspektif Fiqih", in Syafiq Hasyim (ed.), Menakar Harga Perempuan, Mizan, Bandung, 1999, pp. 113-122.

- Mahmood, Saba, "Feminist Theory, Embodiment, and the Docile Agent: Some Reflections on the Egyptian Islamic Revival", in Cultural Anthropology, May, Vol. 16, Issue 2, 2001, pp. 202-237.
- Marcoes, Lies, "The Female Preacher as a Mediator in Religion: A Case Study in Jakarta and West Java", in Sita van Bemmelen et al. (eds.), Women and Mediation in Indonesia, KITLV Press, Leiden, 1992.
- Marcoes, Lies, "Mencoba Mencari Titik Temu Islam dan Hak Reproduksi Perempuan", in Syafiq Hasyim (ed.), Menakar Harga Perempuan, Mizan, 1999, Bandung, pp. 15-21.
- Marcoes, Lies, "Aisyiyah Between Worship, Charity and Professionalism" in Mayling Oey Gardiner and Carla Bianpoen (eds.), Indonesian Women: The Journey Continues, ANU, Canberra, 2000, pp. 125-138.
- Marcoes, Lies, "Women's Grassroots Movements in Indonesia: A Case Study of the PKK and Islamic Women's Organization", in Kathryn Robinson and Sharon Bessel (eds.), Women in Indonesia: Gender, Equity and Development, Institute of South East Asia Studies, Singapore, 2002, pp. 188-197.
- Mastuhu, "Principles of Education in Pesantren" in Manfred Oepen and Wolfgang Karcher (eds.), The impact of Pesantren in Education and Community Development in Indonesia, Friedrich Naumann Stiftung: Indonesian Society for Pesantren and Community Development P3M: Technical University Berlin, Jakarta, 1998, pp. 204-211.
- Mas'udi, Masdar F., "Menguak Pemikiran Kitab Kuning", Pesantren, October-Desember, 1984.
- Mas'udi, Masdar F., "Pesantren Masa Datang dan Tiga Tipe Kiyai", in Muntaha Azhari and Abdul Muri'm Saleh (eds.), Islam Indonesia menatap Masa Depan, P3M, Jakarta, 1989.
- Mas'udi, Masdar F., "Perempuan di antara Lembaran Kitab Kuning", in Lies Marcoes and Johan Hendrik Meuleman (eds.), Wanita Islam Indonesia dalam Kajian Tekstual dan Kontekstual, INIS, Jakarta, 1993, pp. 155-163.
- Mas'udi, Masdar F., "Potensi Perubahan Gender di Lingkungan Umat Islam: Sebuah Pengalaman", in Syafiq Hasyim (ed.), Menakar Harga Perempuan, Mizan, Bandung, 1999, pp. 242-248.
- Moghadam, Valentine, "Islamic Feminism and Its Discontents: Toward a Resolution of The Debate", in Therese Saliba et al. (eds.), Gender, Politics and Islam, University of Chicago Press, Chicago and London, 2002, pp. 15-51.
- Muhammad, Husein, "Kajian Atas Kitab Uqud al-Lujain", Tashwirul Afkar, no. 5, 1999, pp. 94-100.
- Muhammad, Husein, "Pesantren and The Issue of Gender Relation", Kultur (The Indonesian Journal for Muslim Cultures), Volume 2, Number 2, 2002, pp. 63-81.
- Munawaroh, Junaidatul, "Rahmah el-Yunusiah: Pelopor Pendidikan Perempuan", in Jajat Burhanuddin, Ulama Perempuan Indonesia, PT Gramedia Pustaka Utama, Jakarta, 2002, pp. 1-38.
- Munir, Lily Zakiyah, "He is Your Garment and You are His...": Religious Precept, Interpretations, and Power Relations in Marital Sexuality among Javanese Women", Sojourn: Journal of Social Issues in Southeast Asia, Oct, Vol. 17, 2, 2002.
- Munir, Lily Zakiyah. "Islam, and Gender: Reading Equity and Patriarchy", in K.S. Nathan and Muhammad Hashim Kamali (eds.), Islam in Southeast Asia: political, social and strategic challenges for the 21st century, Institute of Southeast Asian Studies, Singapore, 2005, pp. 191-205.
- Muttaqien, E.Z., "Ulama Wanita" in Mimbar Ulama, no. 39 April/Mei, 1980.
- Nelson, C., "Public and Private Politics: Women in the Middle Eastern World", in American Ethnologist, vol. 1, no. 3, 1974.

- Nieuwenhuis, Madelon Djajadiningrat, "Ibuisism and Priyayization: Path to Power?", in Elsbeth Locher-Scholten and Anke Niehof (eds.), Indonesian Women in Focus: Past and Present Notions, Foris Publication, Dordrecht/Holland, 1987, pp. 43-51.
- Oepen, Manfred, "Pesantren and NGOs in Rural Development: Cooperation and Controversies", in Manfred Oepen and Wolfgang Karcher (eds.), The impact of Pesantren in Education and Community Development in Indonesia, Friedrich Naumann Stiftung: Indonesian Society for Pesantren and Community Development (P3M): Technical University Berlin, Jakarta, 1998, pp. 118-135.
- Oepen, Manfred and Wolfgang Karcher (eds.), The impact of Pesantren in Education and Community Development in Indonesia, Friedrich Naumann Stiftung: Indonesian Society for Pesantren and Community Development (P3M), Technical University Berlin, Jakarta, 1988.
- Okely, Judith, "Privileges, Schooled and Finished: Boarding Education for Girls", in Shirley Ardener (ed.), Women and Space: Ground Rules and Social Maps, Croom Helm, London, 1981, pp. 109-139.
- Ong, Aihwa and Michael G. Peletz (eds.), "Introduction" in Aihwa Ong and Michael G. Peletz (eds.), Bewitching Women, Pious Men: Gender and Body Politics in South east Asia, University of California Press, Berkeley, 1995, pp. 1-18.
- Parawansa, Khofifah Indar, "Institution Building: An Effort To Improve Indonesian Women's Role and Status" in Kathryn Robinson and Sharon Bessel (eds.), Women in Indonesia: Gender, Equity and Development, Institute of South East Asia Studies, Singapore, 2002, pp. 68-77.
- Parker, Lyn, "Introduction", in Lyn Parker (ed.), The Agency of Women in Asia, Marshall Cavendish International, Singapore, 2005, pp. 1-25.
- Pelets, Michael G., "Neither Reasonable nor Responsible: Contrasting Representations of Masculinity in a Malay Society" in Aihwa Ong and Michael G. Peletz (eds.), Bewitching Women, Pious Men: Gender and Body Politics in South East Asia, University of California Press, Berkeley, 1995, pp. 76-123.
- Rahman, Anita, "Moslem Women's Organisations: Their Role in Attaining the Benefits of Development", in Gardiner, Mayling Oey and Carla Bianpoen (eds.), Indonesian Women: The Journey Continues, ANU, Canberra, 2000.
- Rajab, Budi, "Pendidikan Sekolah dan Perubahan Kedudukan Perempuan", in Jurnal Perempuan, May, 2002, pp. 19-33.
- Rassam, Amal, "Women and Domestic Power in Morocco", International Journal of Middle East Studies, No. 12, 1980.
- Robinson, Kathryn, "Indonesian Women from Orde Baru to Reformasi", in Louise Edwards and Mina Roces (eds.), Women in Asia: Tradition, Modernity and Globalisation, Allen & Unwin, Australia, 2000, pp. 139-169.
- Robinson, Kathryn, "Gender Orders in Some Societies of the Indonesian Archipelago", in Kultur (The Indonesian Journal for Muslim Culture), Volume 2, Number 2, 2002, pp. 1-20.
- Roces, Mina and Louise Edwards, "Contesting Gender Narratives, 1970-2000", in Louise Edwards and Mina Roces (eds.), Women in Asia: Tradition, Modernity and Globalisation, Allen & Unwin, Australia, 2000, pp. 6-38.
- Rogers, S., "Female Forms of Power and the Myth of Male Dominance: A Model of Female/Male Interaction in Peasant Society", in American Ethnologist, Vol.2, no. 4, 1975.
- Sadli, Saparinah, "Feminism in Indonesia in an International Context" in Kathryn Robinson and Sharon Bessel (eds.), Women in Indonesia: Gender, Equity and Development, Institute of South East Asia Studies, Singapore, 2002.

- Saliba, Therese, "Introduction" in Therese Saliba et al. (eds.), Gender, Politics and Islam, University of Chicago Press, Chicago and London, 2002, pp. 1-13.
- Schlegel, Stuart A., "Technocrats in a Muslim Society: Symbolic Communities in Aceh", in Gloria Davis (ed.), What is Modern Indonesian Culture, Ohio University: Centre for International Studies South Asia series, 1979, pp. 232-248.
- Sears, Laurie J., "Introduction: Fragile Identities", in Laurie J. Sears (ed.), Fantasizing the Feminine in Indonesia, Duke University Press, Durham and London, 1996, pp. 1-44.
- Sen, Khrisna, "Indonesian Women at Work" in Khrisna Sen and Maila Stivens (eds.), Women in Affluent Asia, Routledge, London etc., 1998, pp. 35-62.
- Seoud Khattab, Hind Abou and Syada Greiss El Daeif, "Female Education in Egypt: Changing Attitudes Over a Span of 100 Years" in Freda Husein (ed.), Muslim Women, Croom Helm, London and Sydney, 1984.
- Shihab, M. Quraish, "Konsep Wanita Menurut Quran, Hadis dan Sumber-Sumber Ajaran Islam" in Lies Marcoes and Johan Hendrik Meuleman (eds.), Wanita Islam Indonesia dalam Kajian Tekstual dan Kontekstual, INIS, Jakarta, 1993, pp. 3-17.
- Shihab, M. Quraish, "Kodrat Perempuan Versus Normal Kultural" in Lily Zakiyah Munir, Memposisikan Kodrat. Mizan, Bandung, 1999, pp. 77-89.
- Sholha, Mohammad, "Mengenang Kebesaran Imam Nawawi", Tebuireng, no. 4, August, 1986, pp. 16-17.
- Sjahrir, Kartini, "Perempuan Intelektual Indonesia: Suatu Pengatan", in Mely G. Tan (ed.), Perempuan Indonesia Pemimpin Masa Depan?, Third Edition, Pustaka Sinar Harapan, Jakarta, 1996, pp. 20-27.
- Smith, Jane I., "The Experience of Muslim Women: Consideration of Power and Authority", in John L. Esposito(ed.), Islam The Straight Path, Oxford University Press, New York, 1998.
- Spellberg, Denise A., "Political Action and Public Example: 'A'isha and the Battle of the Camel" in Nikki R. Keddie and Beth Baron (eds.), Women in Middle Eastern History: Shifting Boundaries in Sex and Gender, Yale University Press, New Haven and London, 1991, pp. 45-57.
- Stivens, Maila, "Theorising Gender, Power and Modernity in Affluent Asia" in Khrisna Sen and Maila Stivens (eds.), in Women in Affluent Asia, Routledge, London etc., 1998, pp. 1-34.
- Suleeman, Evelyn, "Pendidikan Wanita di Indonesia", in T.O. Ihromi (ed.), Kajian Wanita dalam Pembangunan, Yayasan Obor Indonesia, Jakarta, 1995.
- Suryakusuma, Julia I., "The State and Sexuality in New Order Indonesia", in Laurie J. Sears (ed.), Fantasizing the Feminine in Indonesia, Duke University Press, Durham and London, 1996, pp. 92-119.
- Suryochondro, Sukanti, "The development of Women's Movement in Indonesia", in Mayling Oey Gardiner and Carla Bianpoen (eds.), Indonesian Women: The Journey Continues, ANU, Canberra, 2000, pp. 224, 243.
- Tanner, Nancy, "Matrifocality in Indonesia and Africa and among Black America", in Michelle Zimbalist Rosaldo and Louise Lamphere, Women, Culture and Society, Stanford University Press, Stanford California, 1974, pp. 129-156.
- Tiwon, Sylvia, "Models and Maniacs: Articulating the Female in Indonesia", in Jane L. Sears (ed.), Fantasizing the Feminine in Indonesia, Duke University Press, Durham and London, 1996.
- Tohidi, Nayereh, "Guardians of the Nation: Women, Islam, and Soviet Legacy of Modernization in Azerbaijan", in Herbert L. Bodman and Nayereh Tohidi (eds.), Women in Muslim Societies: Diversity Within Unity, Lynne Rienner Publisher, London, 1998.

- Umar, Nasaruddin, "Kodrat Perempuan dalam Perspektif al-Quran", in Lily Zakiah Munir, Memosisikan Kodrat, Mizan, Bandung, 1999, pp. 91-110.
- Umar, Nasaruddin and Amany Lubis, "Hawa Sebagai Symbol Ketergantungan: Perempuan dalam Kitab Tafsir" in Ali Muhannif (ed.) Perempuan dalam Literatur Islam Klasik, PT. Gramedia Pustaka Utama, Jakarta, 2002, pp. 1-44.
- Wahid, Abdurrahman, "Principles of Pesantren Education", in Manfred Oepen and Wolfgang Karcher (eds.), The impact of Pesantren in Education and Community Development in Indonesia, Friedrich Naumann Stiftung: Indonesian Society for Pesantren and Community Development (P3M): Technical University Berlin, Jakarta, 1988.
- Wahid, Abdurrahman, "Islam dan Hak Asasi Manusia", in Lily Zakiah Munir, Memosisikan Kodrat, Mizan, Bandung, 1999, pp. 35-64.
- Whalley, Lucy A., "Urban Minangkabau Muslim Women: Modern Choices, Traditional Concerns in Indonesia", in Herbert L. Bodman and Nayereh Tohidi (eds.), Women in Muslim Societies: Diversity Within Unity, Lynne Rienner Publisher, London, 1998, pp. 229-249.
- Wolfe, Diane L., "Javanese Factory Daughters; Gender, the State, and Industrial Capitalism", in Laurie J. Sears (ed.), Fantasizing the Feminine in Indonesia, Duke University Press, Durham and London, 1996, pp. 140-162.
- Yafie, Ali, "Kedudukan, dan Kepemimpinan Perempuan", in Lily Zakiah Munir, Memosisikan Kodrat, Mizan, Bandung, 1999, pp. 65-76.
- Yusuf, Maftuchah, "Kepemimpinan Perempuan: Pemikiran Seorang Muslimah", in Mely G. Tan (ed.), Perempuan Indonesia: Pemimpin Masa Depan?, Pustaka Sinar Harapan, Jakarta, 1991.
- Zainuddin, Ailsa, "Education in the Netherlands East Indies and The Republic of Indonesia", in R.J.W. Selleck (ed.), Melbourne Studies in Education, Melbourne University Press, Carlton Victoria, 1970, pp. 17-83.
- Zuhdy, M.D., "Nyai Khoiriyah Hasyim: Inovator Muslimah", Tebuireng, no. 1, May, 1986, pp. 44-45.
- Zuhdy, Muhsin, "Wanita Ulet Jawa Timur: Nyai Yasin", Tebuireng, no. IX, January, 1987, pp. 30-31.

Books

- Abdullah, Irwan, "Introduction", in Irwan Abdullah, Sangkan Paran Gender, Pustaka Pelajar, Yogyakarta, 2003.
- Abdullah, Taufik, Schools and Politics: The Kaum Muda Movement in West Sumatra (1927-1933), Cornell Indonesian Modern Asia Program, Ithaca New York, 1971.
- Abobakar, Sejarah Hidup K.H.A. Wahid Hasyim dan Karangan Tersiar, Panitia Buku Peringatan Alm. K.H.A Wahid Hasyim, Jakarta, 1957.
- Abu-Lughod, Lila (ed.), Remaking Women: Feminism and Modernity in the Middle East, Princeton University Press, Princeton New Jersey, 1998.
- Afshar, Haleh, Islam and Feminism: an Iranian Case Study, New York: St. Martin's Press,
- Ahmed, Leila, Women and Gender in Islam: Historical Roots of a Modern Debate, Yale University Press, New Heaven and London, 1998.
- Amin, Qasim, Tahrir al-Mar'a [first published in Arabic in 1899], The American University in Cairo Press, Egypt, 1992.
- Amiruddin, Hasbi, Ulama Dayah Pengawal Agama Masyarakat, Aceh, Nadiya Foundation, Lhokseumawe, 2003.

- Amiruddin, Hasbi, Perjuangan Ulama Aceh di Tengah Konflik, Cenninet Press, Yogyakarta, 2004.
- An.Naim, Abdullahi Ahmed, Toward an Islamic Reformation: Civil Liberties, Human Rights, and International Law, New York, 1986.
- An.Naim, Abdullahi Ahmed (ed.), Islamic Family Law in A changing World, : Zed Book Ltd, London and New York, 2002.
- Anderson, Benedict R., Language and Power: Exploring Political Culture in Indonesia, Cornell University Press, Ithaca New York, etc.: 1990.
- Anonymous. Direktori Pesantren, Perhimpunan Pengembangan Pesantren dan Masyarakat, Jakarta, 1986.
- Ask, Karin and Marit Tjomsland (eds.), Women and Islamization: Contemporary Dimensions of Discourse on Gender Relation, Berg, Oxford, 1998.
- Aspinall, Edward, Islam and Nation: Separatist Rebellion in Aceh, Indonesia, Stanford University Press, California, 2009.
- Atkinson, Jane Moning and Shelly Errington (eds.), Power and Difference: Gender in Island Southeast Asia, Stanford University Press, Stanford, 1990.
- Azra, Azyumardi, Surau: Pendidikan Islam Tradisional dalam Transisi dan Modernisasi, Logos, Jakarta, 2003.
- Azra, Azyumardi, The Origins of Islamic Reformism in Southeast Asia: networks of Malay-Indonesian and Middle Eastern 'Ulamā' in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, Allen & Unwin, Crows Nest, N.S.W., 2004.
- Baihaqi, AK, Baihaqi, Ulama dan Madrasah di Aceh, Lembaga Ilmu Pengetahuan Indonesia bekerja sama dengan Departemen Agama, Jakarta, 1976.
- Barton, Greg, Abdurrahman Wahid, Muslim democrat, Indonesian President, UNSW press, Sydney NSW, 2002.
- Benda, Harry J. et al., The World of Southeast Asia: Selected Historical Reading, Happer and Row Publisherd, New York and London, 1967.
- Berninghausen, Jutta and Birgit Kerstan, Forging New Paths: Feminist Social Methodology and Rural Women in Java, Zed Books, London: Atlantic Highland, NJ, USA, 1992.
- Blackburn, Susan et al (eds.), Indonesian Islam in New Era: How Women Negotiate Their Muslim Identities, Monash University Press, Clayton, 1998.
- Blackburn, Susan, Women and the state in modern Indonesia, Cambridge University Press, Cambridge, 2004.
- Blackwood, Evelyn, Webs of Power: Women, Kin, and Community in a Sumatran Village, Rowman & Littlefield Publishers, Inc, New York etc., 2000.
- Boland, B.J., The Struggle of Islam in Modern Indonesia, Nijhoff, The Hague, 1971.
- Bourdieu, Pierre, Outline of a Theory Practice, Cambridge University Press, Cambridge and New York, 1977.
- Brenner, Suzanne April, 1998, The Domestication of Desire: Women, Wealth, and Modernity in Java, Princeton University Press, New Jersey and UK, 1998.
- Bruinessen, Martin van, Tarekat Naqsyabandiah di Indonesia: Survei Historis, Geografis dan Sosiologis, Mizan, Bandung, 1992.
- Bruinessen, Martin van, NU: Tradisi, Relasi-Relasi Kuasa, Pencarian Wacana Baru, LKiS Yogyakarta and Pustaka Pelajar, Yogyakarta, 1994.
- Bruinessen, Martin van, Kitab Kuning: Ppesantren dan Tarekat: Tradisi-Tradisi Islam di Indonesia, Mizan, Bandung, 1995.
- Buresh, Scott Allen, Pesantren-based Development: Islam, Education, and Economic Development in Indonesia, Ann Arbor, MI, UMI, 2003.
- Butler, Judith, Gender Trouble: Feminism and The Subversion of Identity, Routledge, USA, 1990.

- Cote, Joost, Letters from Kartini: An Indonesian Feminist 1900-1904, Monash Asia Institute, Clayton Victori, 1992.
- Creese, Helen, Women of the Kakawin World: Marriage and Sexuality in the Indic Courts of Java and Bali, E Sharpe, New York and England, 2004.
- Dhofier, Zamakhsyari, Tradisi Pesantren: Studi Tentang Pandangan Hidup Kiyai, Lembaga Penelitian, Pendiidkan dan Penerangan Ekonomi dan Sosial, Jakarta: 1982.
- Doorn-Harder, Pietermella van, Women Shaping Islam: Indonesian Women Reading the Qur'an, University of Illinois Press, Urbana Illinois, 2006.
- Dubee, Lila, Women and kinship: comparative perspectives on gender in South and South-East Asia, United Nations University Press, Tokyo, 1997.
- Edwards, Rosalind, Mature Women Students: Separating or Connecting Family and education, Taylor and Francis, London and Washington DC, 1993.
- Effendi, Djohan, A Renewal Without Breaking Tradition: The Emergence of a New Discourse in Indonesia's Nahdlatul Ulama during the Abdurrahman Wahid Era, Interfidei, Yogyakarta, 2008.
- Faiqoh, Nyai: Agen Perubahan di Pesantren, Kucica, Jakarta, 2003.
- Fakih, Mansour, Analisis Gender dan Transformasi Sosial, Pustaka Pelajar, Yogyakarta, 2001.
- Frisk, Sylva, Submitting to God: Women and Islam in Urban Malaysia, NIAS Press: Denmark, 2009.
- Geertz, Clifford, The Religion of Java, Free Press, Glencoe, Ill., 1960.
- Geertz, Hildred, The Javanese Family: A Study of Kinship and Socialization, The Free Press of Glencoe, Inc., USA, 1961.
- Gunseikanbu, Orang Indonesia Yang Terkemuka di Jawa, Gadjah Mada University Press, Yogyakarta, 1986.
- Habermas, Jürgen, The Structural Transformation of the Public Sphere, translated by Thomas Burger and Frederick Lawrence, The MIT Press, Cambridge and Massachusetts, 1989.
- Haw, Kaye, Educating Muslim Girls: Shifting Discourse, Open University Press, Bunkingham/Philadelphia, 1998.
- Hing, Lee Kam, Education and Politics in Indonesia 1945-1965, University of Malaya Press, 1995, Kuala Lumpur.
- Holub, Robert C., Jürgen Habermas: Critic in the Public Sphere, Routledge, London and New York, 1991.
- Hooker, M.B., Indonesian Islam: Social Change through Contemporary Faith, Crows Nest, NSW: Allen & Unwin; University of Hawai'i Press, Honolulu, 2003.
- Horikoshi, Hiroko, Kyai and Perubahan Sosial, P3M, Jakarta, 1982.
- Husein, Muhammad, "Kajian atas Kitab Uqud al-Lujain", Tashwirul Afkar, no. 5, 1999.
- Istiadah, Muslim Women in Contemporary Indonesia: Investigating Path to Resist Patriarchal System, Centre of South East Asia, Monash University, Clayton, 1995.
- Kandiyoti, Deniz, Women, Islam and the State, Temple University Press, Philadelphia, 1991.
- Kandiyoti, Deniz, Gendering the Middle East: Emerging Perspectives, IB Tauris Publisher, London and New York, 1996.
- Khuluq, Lathiful, Fajar Kebangunan Ulama: Biografi K.H. Kiai Hasyim Asy'ary, first edition, LkiS, Yogyakarta, 1999.
- Koentjaraningrat, Javanese Culture, Oxford University Press, Singapore etc., 1989.

- Lateef, Shahida, Muslim Women in India: Political and Private Realities, Zed Book Ltd, London and New Jersey, 1990.
- Locher-Scholten, Elsbeth, Women and the Colonial State: Essays on Gender and Modernity in the Netherlands Indies, 1900-1942, Amsterdam University Press, Amsterdam, 2000.
- Madjid, Nurcholis, Bilik-Bilik Pesantren: Sebuah Potret Perjalanan, Paramadina, Jakarta, 1997.
- Madmarn, Hasan, Traditional Muslim Institutions in Southern Thailand: A Critical Study of Islamic Education an Arabic Influence in the Pondok and Madrasah System of Pattani, UMI (University Microfilm International), 1992.
- Makdisi, George, The Rise of Colleges: Institutions of Learning in Islam and the West, Edinburgh University Press, Edinburgh, 1981.
- Mansurnoor, Iik Arifin, Islam in an Indonesian World: Ulama of Madura, Gadjah Mada University Press, Yogyakarta, 1990.
- Martyn, Elizabeth, The Women's Movement in Post Colonial Indonesia: Gender and Nation in a New Democracy, Routledge-Curzon, London and New York, 2005.
- Mashuri, Aziz, Al-Maghfurlah KH.M. Bishri Syansuri; Cita-cita dan Pengabdiannya, al-Ikhlash, Surabaya, nd
- Massadih, Egy et al. (eds.), Srikandi: Sejumlah Wanita Indonesia Berprestasi, PT. Cipta Widya Swara, Jakarta, 1991.
- Mastuhu, Dinamika Sistem Pendidikan Pesantren: Suatu Kajian tentang Unsur dan Nilai Sistem Pendidikan Pesantren, INIS, Jakarta, 1994.
- Ma'sum, Saifullah, Karisma Ulama: Kehidupan Ringkas 26 Tokoh NU, Mizan, Bandung, 1998.
- Mernissi, Fatima, Beyond the Veil: Male-Female Dynamics in Modern Muslim Society, Indiana University Press, Bloomington and Indianapolis, 1985.
- Mernissi, Fatima, The Forgotten Queens of Islam, Translated by Mary Jo Lakeland, Polity Press, Cambridge, 1993.
- Mernissi, Fatima, The Harem Within, Bantam Books, Toronto and Sydney, 1995.
- Minault, Gail, Secluded Scholars: Women's Education and Muslim Social Reform in Colonial India, Oxford University Press, New York, 1998.
- Moghadam, Valentine, Modernizing Women: Gender and Social Change in the Middle East, Boulder, CO: L. Rienner, 1993.
- Moghissi, Haideh, Women and Islam: Critical Concepts in Sociology, Routledge, London and New York, 2005.
- Mulder, Niels, Inside Indonesia Society: Cultural Change in Java, The Pepin Press, Amsterdam and Kuala Lumpur, 1996.
- Mulia, Siti Musdah, Muslimah Reformis, Mizan, Bandung, 2004.
- Muthaliin, Achmad, Bias Gender dalam Pendidikan, first edition, Muhammadiyah University Press, Surakarta, 2001.
- Nicholson, Linda, Gender and History: The Limits of Social Theory in the Age of Family, Columbia Press, New York, 1986.
- Noer, Deliar, The Modernist Muslim Movement in Indonesia, 1900-1942, Oxford University Press, Singapore, New York, 1973.
- Nuriyah-A. Wahid, Sinta et al., Wajah Baru Relasi Suami Istri: (Telaah Kitab 'Uqûd al-Lujjayn, LKIS, Yogyakarta, 2001.
- Oakley, Ann, Sex, Gender and Society, Sun Book, Melbourne, 1972.
- Peacock, James L., Indonesia: An Anthropological Perspective, Goodyear Pub. Co, Pacific Palisades, Calif, 1973.
- Peacock, Jame L., Purifying the Faith: The Muhammadiyah Movement in Indonesian Islam, Menlo Park, California, 1978.

- Peletz, Michael, G. Reason and Passion: Representation of Gender in a Malay Society, University of California Press, Berkeley etc., 1996.
- Perhimpunan Pengembangan Pesantren dan Masyarakat, Direktori Pesantren, P3M, Jakarta, 1986.
- Rahardjo, Dawam, Pergulatan Dunia Pesantren: Membangun dari Bawah, P3M, Jakarta, 1985.
- Ricklef, M.C., 1993, A history of Modern Indonesia since c. 1300, London: Macmillan.
- Robinson, Kathryn and Sharon Bessel (eds.), "Introduction", Women in Indonesia: Gender, Equity and Development, Institute of South East Asia Studies, Singapore, 2002.
- Roded, Ruth, Women in Islamic Biographical Collections: From Ibn Sa'ad to Who's Who, Lynne Rienner Publishers, Boulder & London, 1994.
- Roded, Ruth (ed.), Women in Islam and the Middle East: A Reader, I.B. Tauris Publisher, London and New York, 1999.
- Rohrlich-Leavitt, R., Women Cross Culturally: Change and Challenge, Mouton Publishers, The Hague and Paris, 1975.
- Ropi Ismatu and Jamhari, Citra perempuan dalam Islam: Pandangan Ormas Keagamaan, Gramedia Pustaka Utama bekerjasama dengan PPIM-UIN Jakarta dan The Ford Foundation, Jakarta, 2003.
- Rorty, Richard, Contingency, Irony and Solidarity, Cambridge; Cambridge University Press, New York, 1989.
- Rosaldo, Michelle Zimbalist and Louise Lamphere, Women, Culture and Society, Stanford University Press, Stanford California, 1974.
- Saby, Yusny, Islam and Social Change: The Role of the Ulama in the Acehnese Society, UKM Press, Kuala Lumpur, 2004.
- Sadli, Saparinah and Lily Dhakidae, Perempuan dan Ilmu Pengetahuan, Yayasan Ilmu-Ilmu Sosial, Jakarta, 1990.
- Salam, Solichin, KH. Hasyim Asy'ary: Ulama Besar Indonesia, Jaya Murni, Jakarta, 1993.
- Sayyid-Marsot, Afaf Lutfi, Women and Men in Late Eighteenth-century Egypt, University of Texas Press, USA, 1995.
- Shiraishi, Saya Sasaki, Young Heroes; The Indonesian Family in Politics, Cornell University, Ithaca New York, 1997.
- Siegel, James T., The Rope of God, University of California Press, Berkeley and Los Angeles, 1969.
- Siradj, Said Aqiel, Islam Kebangsaan: Fiqih Demokratik Kaum Santri, Pustaka Ciganjur, Jakarta, 1999.
- Snouck Hurgronje, C., The Atjehnese, Leiden, E.J. Brill, 1906.
- Snouck Hurgronje, C., Mekka in the Latter Part of the 19th century : Daily Life, Customs and Learning of the Moslems of the East-Indian archipelago, translated by J.H. Monahan, Brill, Leiden, 1970.
- Soekardi, Heru, Kiyai Hasyim Asy'ary, Departemen Pendidikan dan Kebudayaan, Pusat Penelitian Sejarah dan Budaya, Proyek Inventarisasi dan Dokumentasi Sejarah Nasional, Jakarta, 1979/1980.
- Steenbrink, Karel A., Pesantren, Madrasah, Sekolah: Pendidikan Islam dalam Kurun Modern, LP3ES, Jakarta, 1986.
- Subadio, Maria Ulfah and T.O. Ihromi (eds.), Peranan dan Kedudukan Wanita Indonesia, Gadjah Mada University Press, Yogyakarta, 1983.
- Sukamto, Kepemimpinan Kiai dalam Pesantren, LP3ES, Jakarta, 1999.
- Sukri Sri Suhandjati and Sofwan Ridin, Perempuan dan Seksualitas dalam Tradisi Jawa, Kerja sama Pusat Studi Wanita (PSW), IAIN Walisongo dengan Gama Media, Yogyakarta, 2001.
- Sullivan, Earl L., Women in Egyptian Public Life, Syracuse University Press, New York, 1986.

- Sullivan, Norma, Masters and Managers: A Study of Gender Relations in Urban Java, Allen & Unwin, St. Leonards, N.S.W., 1994.
- Sunarwoto, The Influence of Meccan Education on the Pesantren Tradition, unpublished MA thesis, University Leiden, 2008.
- Suratmin, Nyai Ahmad Dahlan, Depdikbud (Proyek Biographi Pahlawan Nasional), Jakarta, 1977.
- Tan, Mely G. (ed.), Perempuan Indonesia: Pemimpin Masa Depan?, Pustaka Sinar Harapan, Jakarta, 1991.
- Taylor, Jean Gelman (ed.), Women Creating Indonesia: The First Fifty Years, Monash Asia Institute, Australia, 1997.
- Team PDP, n.d., Tebuireng dari Masa ke Masa, Pondok Pesantren Tebuireng, Jombang Jawa Timur.
- Tim Penyusun Kamus, Kamus Besar Bahasa Indonesia, Balai Pustaka, Jakarta, 1988.
- Umar, Nasaruddin, Argumen Kesetaraan Jender: Perspektif al-Qur'an, Penerbit Paramadina, Jakarta, 2001.
- Vickers, Adrian, A History of Modern Indonesia, Cambridge University Press, Cambridge, 2005.
- Wadud, Amina, Qur'an and Woman: Rereading the Sacred Text from a Woman's Perspective, Oxford University Press, Oxford, 1999.
- Wahid, Abdurrahman, Menggerakkan Tradisi: Esai-Esai Pesantren, LKIS, Yogyakarta, 2001.
- Wahid, Marzuki, et al., Pesantren Masa Depan: Wacana Pemberdayaan dan Transformasi Pesantren, Pustaka Hidayah, Bandung, 1999.
- William, Linda B., Development, Demography, and Family Decision-Making: the Status of Women in Rural Java, Westview Press, Boulder, 1990.
- Woodsmall, Ruth Frances, Women in the Changing Islamic System, Bimla Publishing House, Delhi, 1983.
- Yegenoglu, Meyda, Colonial Fantasies: Towards a Feminist Reading of Orientalism, Cambridge University Press, Cambridge, UK; New York, 1998.
- Yunus, Mahmud, Sejarah Pendidikan Islam di Indonesia, Hidakarya Agung, Jakarta, 1984.
- Yusuf, Slamet Effendi, et al., Dinamika Kaum Santri: Menelusuri Jejak & Pergolakan Internal NU, Rajawali, Jakarta, 1983.
- Zainab, Siti, Nyai, Kiai dan Pesantren, Yayasan Kesejahteraan Fatayat, Yogyakarta, 2002.
- Zuhri, Saifuddin, Guruku Orang-Orang Dari Pesantren, LkiS, Yogyakarta, 2001.

Newspapers/Magazines

- "Doktor Berkat Gender", Familia Jawa Pos, October 12, 2003.
- Firdaus, Iman, "Bomber Tak Terjamah, Pesantren Kena Getah", Forum Keadilan, no. 28, 6 November 2005, pp. 12-15.
- "Imam Perempuan Asal Manhattan", in Gatra, April 2, 2005, pp. 80-82.
- Munir, Lily Zakiyah, "Islam, Gender and Equal Rights for Women", The Jakarta Post, December 10, 2002.
- "Perempuan, Pesantren, dan Carok Simbolis", www.kompas.com (9 September, 2002).
- "Tiga Partai Siapkan kuota 30% Perempuan", Kompas, September 26, 2003.

- “Wanita Indonesia: Membongkar Akar Ketidakadilan Melalui Pesantren”, <http://www.balitbangham.go.id> (28 December 2005).
 “Yusuf Kalla: Tak ada Perintah Soal Sidik Jari”, Tempo, 25 December, 2005, pp. 34-35.

Online Sources

- <http://www.bagais.go.id>
www.fatayat.or.id
www.muslimat-nu.or.id www.menegpp.go.id
www.nu.or.id
www.rahima.or.id

Documents

- Education Management Information System-Departemen Agama R.I-T.P. 2003-2004.
 Kabupaten Jombang Dalam Angka 2002.
 Pedoman Pembinaan Pondok Pesantren 1987/1988 (The guidelines of pesantren 1987/1988) published by the Ministry of Religious Affairs.
 Rekap Pendataan EMIS Pondok Pesantren Kabupaten Jombang 2003.
 Rekap Pendataan Emis Pondok Pesantren Kabupaten Jombang 2004.
 Summary EMIS Narrative and Statistical Report Pondok Pesantren Thirty Provinces Republic of Indonesia School Year 2001-2002.

Pesantren Booklets

- Buku Kenangan Peringatan Satu Abad Pondok Pesantren Tebuireng*, published by Pondok Pesantren Tebuireng, 1999.
Buku Panduan Pondok Pesantren Putri Walisongo, published by Pondok Pesantren Walisongo, 2002.
Buku Panduan Pondok Puteri Salafiyah Syafi'iyah Seblak, Jombang Jawa Timur, published by Pengurus Pondok Putri Salafiyah Syafi'iyah Seblak Jombang 2003 and 2004.
Panduan Santri Pondok Pesantren Tebuireng Jombang published by Badan Pembina Santri Pondok Pesantren Tebuireng Jombang, 2003.
Pondok Pesantren Syalafiyah Seblak dalam Sejarah by KH. Machfudz Anwar and Nyai Abidah Maksom published by Pesantren Salafiyah al-Machfudz Seblak Jombang, 1997.
Risalah Akhir Sanah Pondok Pesantren Mambaul Ma'arif Denanyar-Jombang, n.d, published by Pondok Pesantren Mambaul Ma'arif Denanyar-Jombang.

The Kitab Kuning

- Adâb al-Muâsyarah baina al-Zaujayni li Tahsil al-Sa'âdah al-Zaujiyya al-Haqiqiyyah* compiled by Ahmad Ibn Asymûnî.
Akhlâq al-Banât written by Umar Ibn Ahmad Bârajâ'.
Qurrat al-'Uyûn fi al-Nikâh al-Syar'î wa Adâbibi.
Syarah 'Uqûd al-Lujjayn fi Bayân Huqûq al-Zaujain written by Syaikh Muhammad Ibn Umar al-Nawâwi al-Jawî.

Index

- Abdul Karim 70, 73
Abdul Kholik Hasyim 70
Abdul Wahid Hasyim 18, 70, 72-3, 79
Abdurrahman Wahid 33, 59, 72-3,
137-8, 140-1, 144-5, 148, 152, 156
Abidah 7, 29, 56, 58, 69, 72-81, 83,
85, 87, 95-113, 128, 133, 136, 150-4
Aceh 11, 22, 26-7, 32, 34, 40-1, 124, 144
Acehnese 22, 40
Achmad Baidlowi 70, 72
Ada`b al-Mua`sharah 125 agency 15, 17, 19, 25-9, 35, 52, 56, 68-69, 87, 108, 117, 135-6
Ahmad Khatib 41, 71, 150
Aisyah 104
Aisyah 72-3, 147
Akhlaqul Banat 156
al-Amtsilat al-Tasrifiyah 151 al-Azhar 38
al-Hanif 84
al-Haram mosque 89, 150
Alie Yafie 21 al-Zarnuji 44 ambiguity 30, 106, 128
American 85, 101, 135
amr ma`ruf nahy munkar (enjoining good and forbidding evil acts) 54 anak pondok 40 anfa`uhum li al-nas (the most fruitful person for others) 130
anthropologists 19-20
Arabic 16, 32-3, 40, 42, 70, 84, 95-6, 121, 127, 137, 142, 151
– grammatical rules 151
– script 16, 32, 95-6, 137
Archipelago 16, 21-2, 37, 39, 41, 83,
119, 121, 123, 136, 140, 144, 146,
150
Aristocratic 24, 37, 87, 145
aristocratic families 37, 145
Asrama Putri Selatan 74
astrology 151
astronomy 151
aula (seminar-room) 99

bachelor degree 101, 109, 151
badal nyai 27
Badan Kontak Majelis Taklim Indonesia (BKMTI, the Board of Indonesian Majelis Taklim
Association) 68
badan otonom 57
Badan Syuriah PBNU (Supreme Religious Council of Nahdlatul
Ulama) 93
Badriyah Fayumi 59
Bahasa Jawa halus (refined Javanese language) 44
bahsul masa'il 59
Bandar Kedungmulyo 65, 148
Bandung 37, 137, 139, 143-4, 147-8,
154-6
Bani Hasyim 82
Banten 123
Bapak Pembangunan 48
Barakah 20, 22, 44, 53, 90, 139
bargaining positions 111

- Bisri Syansury 18, 63, 69, 73-4, 89, 110, 143, 149
 black area 70
 blue-blood legitimacy 94 boarding school 16, 40-1, 119-20
 Brawijaya 87
 Breadwinners 31
 budaya baca 83
 Buddhist 16, 65
 Bukittinggi 150
 Buletin Amal Hayati 61
 Bumi Manusia 15
 Bustanul Ulum 40
- Capitalist economic activities 70
 Catholics 65
 central government 71
 Central Java 24, 71, 121, 127, 150 Cepdes (centre for pesantren and democracy studies) 61, 78-9, 83
 Characteristic 17, 24, 42, 44, 55, 118,
 124, 127, 144
 Charisma 17-8, 20, 53, 69, 71, 92, 139, 149-150
 charismatic religious figure 17
 Chile 84
 Chinese 37
 Choliq 72-3
 Christian Missionaries 31
 Cirebon 61
 civil society 28, 83-4, 100 collective leadership 29, 45-6, 80, 106, 109, 133, 145
 communal prayers 18, 34, 45-6, 53,
 80, 91, 101, 103, 132, 153
 Compulsory Education Program 39 conservative perception 131
 Constituent Assembly 98 counter-culture 70
 Cukir 53, 66-7, 69-70, 75, 78
 cultural broker 45 cultural impacts 70 curriculum/curricula 27, 31-2, 38-9, 42, 54, 117, 120-1, 127-8, 149
- dalem* 43
 Darul Hakam 73
 Dayah 11-2, 27, 40-1, 44, 53, 121, 142
 Demak 71
 democracy 61, 78-9, 83-5, 93, 104, 143
 – period 61, 78, 93
 Department of Education 11
 Department of Religious Affairs 7, 11, 64-6, 118, 148
Dewan Pendidikan 11, 102
 Dewi Sartika 37
 Dharma Pertiwi 49
 Dharma Wanita (the organisation of the wives of the civil servants) 49-50
 Dichotomy 19, 21, 23, 125, 136
 Diniyah Putri 38, 88, 143
 divorce 19, 57
 Diwek 13, 65-70, 74-5
 domestic – activities 125
 – and public duties 98
 – lives 23, 122, 131
 – responsibilities 110
 – sphere 20, 22, 54, 98, 108
 – violence 26, 61
 dormitory 11-2, 43, 77, 116
 DPRD 11, 98, 102-4, 113
 DPRG 58
 Dutch 15, 31, 37-8, 42, 77, 87
 – ethical policy 37, 87
- East Aceh 40
 East Java 7, 17, 29, 33, 35, 42, 57, 61,
 63, 65, 71-3, 104, 136, 141, 150
 East Indies 15, 37, 143, 151 educational segregation 55, 116-7
 Egypt 19, 38, 40, 91, 119, 131, 152 eighteenth century 16, 41, 91, 144, 152 emancipation 38, 58, 95, 109
 endogamous marriage 28, 34, 51, 88

- English 9, 25-6, 42, 47, 83-4, 151
 – courses 83 ethics 125 ethnic 21, 37, 46, 48, 154 ethnographers 20, 30
- Faiqoh 52, 138, 146
 Farha Ciciek 59, 156
 fashion 119
 Fatayat NU 11, 28, 31, 35, 51, 56, 59-60, 62, 72-3, 102, 104-6, 136, 152, 154
 Fatimah 122, 152, 156
Fatwa 59, 91, 151, 153
 Female Religious Teacher Training College 12, 18, 38, 77, 95 feminism/feminist 20, 52, 107, 138-9, 141, 151, 154 fieldwork 7, 26, 29, 33-5, 42, 45, 53, 59, 63, 65, 68-9, 83-4, 97, 115, 117, 120, 125, 127-8, 131, 137, 139, 155
 figurative parent 43, 142
 fiqh 61, 84, 91, 121-3, 147, 155
 Fiqhunnisa 31, 60-1, 136, 148 formal education 23, 29, 76, 78, 97, 100, 129-30
- gambling 70
Garis-Garis Besar Haluan Negara (GBHN, The Guidelines for the National Policy) 48
 Gedang 71
 gender
 – discourse 124, 127
 – issues 25, 56, 59-62, 83, 122, 124, 130, 138
 – justice and equality 83
 – relation 22, 29, 49, 54, 61, 108, 121, 123-6, 135-6, 139-40, 147, 156 general election 50, 57-58, 63, 97
 Germany 101
 Golkar (Golongan Karya) 11, 153
 Gresik 88, 151
 Gudo 65, 148
- Gunseikabu (Japanese Military Government) 71
 Gus 44-5
 Gusdur 59
- Hadits* 83, 127
hadratu Syaikh 71
 Hafiz 73
hak-hak reproduksi perempuan (women's reproduction right) 61
halaqah 11, 38, 88-9
 Halimah 71
haram (religiously prohibited) 150 harem 115, 154
 Hasan Bashri 58
 Hasyim Asy'ary 18, 35, 65, 69-76, 78, 82, 87-90, 94-5, 108, 110, 138, 149-50, 152
hijriyya 116
 Hindu 16, 65
 Holland 109, 139, 141, 145, 151, 153, 157
 House of Representatives 11, 52, 58-9, 98, 102-3 household 19, 25, 31, 39, 44, 49, 106-11, 124-32
 housewives 23, 31, 46, 49-50
 Husein Muhammad 54, 59, 61, 117, 140, 142-3, 147, 155-6
- ibadah 68
 Ibu Aina 7, 42
 Ibuism 25, 28, 35, 47, 49, 51-3, 55, 94, 134, 136, 141-2, 145-6, 153, 157
 Idul Fitri 67, 96
 Ijbar 122, 155
 Ikatan Pemuda Pelajar Nahdlatul Ulama (IPPNU, the NU Students Network) 101 ilm al-falaq 96
 Ilmu laduni 44
 imam (leader) 150
 Imam al-Nawawi 123, 127, 156

- Independence 23, 39, 47, 57, 77, 93, 149
- Indian 16, 25, 141, 144
- Indonesian
- Communist Party (PKI) 58
 - history 144
 - president 90, 138
 - Representative Office 50
- inheritance 19, 28, 57, 138
- inheritance – matters 19
- Inpres (Instruksi Presiden, President Instruction) 39
- Institut Agama Islam Negeri (The State Institute for Islamic Studies) 92
- Iranian 20, 141
- Islam
- classical textbooks 18, 91
 - economic concept 129
 - Emansipatoris 83, 151
 - Islamic classical literature 124
 - knowledge 68, 96
 - learning 16, 33, 51, 68, 89-90, 94, 99, 102, 127, 137
 - learning heritage 16
 - organisations 38, 60
 - perspectives 84
 - Primary School 75
 - scholarship 89
 - schools 32, 40, 57, 66-7, 75, 94, 99-100
 - sciences 25, 33-4, 52, 69, 71, 74, 87-8, 90-1, 94, 96, 100, 104, 149
 - tradition 16, 54, 99
 - Transformative 83-4
 - world 109
- Jakarta 27, 33, 52, 61, 64-5, 83, 85, 115, 137-8, 140-57
- Jamilah 72-3, 75-82, 101, 129, 130, 133, 152
- Jamu* 42
- Japanese 47, 71, 77, 85
- jarik* (a traditional Javanese cloth) 99
- Javanese court 43
- Javanese Values* 22, 136
- jilbab* 99, 112
- Jogoroto 65
- Jombang 7-8, 13, 15, 18, 29, 33-5, 38, 44-6, 52, 56, 58, 61, 63-77, 84-5, 87, 91, 95-8, 100, 102-4, 113, 124, 128, 133, 136-7, 141, 143, 148-54
- Kalimantan 156
- kanca wingking* (a partner at the back) 126
- Kantor Urusan Agama* (the Office for Religious Affairs) 19
- Kartini 38, 95, 140, 146, 151
- kaum ibu* 48, 161
- kebaya* 99
- Kediri 29, 34, 56, 65, 76, 117, 148-9
- Keras 71, 118
- kerudung rubu* 112
- Khofifah Indar Parawansa 7, 59
- Ki Hajar Dewantara 37-8
- Kiai Adlan Ali 69
- Kiai Ahmad Baidlowi 73
- Kiai Aziz Mansur 45
- Kiai Bisri Syansury 18, 63, 69, 73-4, 89, 110, 143, 149
- Kiai Cholil Bangkalan 71, 123, 149-50
- Kiai Haji Ahmad Dahlan 38
- Kiai Idris 34, 73
- Kiai Idris Marzuki 34
- Kiai Machfudz Anwar 72, 74-8, 81, 83, 96-8, 110, 151
- Kiai Maksum Ali 72, 74-8, 88, 95, 151, 153
- Kiai Manaf Abd Karim 149
- Kiai Muhaimin 88-90, 152
- Kiai Nasir Abd. Fattah 29, 45-6, 75
- Kiai Nur Aziz Ma'sum 72
- Kiai Sahal Machfud 121
- Kiai Saleh Darat 150

- Kiai Shoichah 71
 Kiai Wahab Chasbullah 18, 42, 46, 63, 149
 Kiai Wahid Hasyim 18, 60, 70, 73, 78, 95-7, 110, 149, 151-2
 Kiai Yusuf Hasyim 8, 46, 55, 70, 91, 152
 Kiai Yusuf Mashar 69, 72-3 kiais' families 18, 107
kitab Jawahir al-Kalamiyah 97
kodrat 50, 58, 139, 156
Konstituante 56, 97, 103-4
kota pelajar 101 kota santri 11, 34-5, 63, 65, 67
kraton 23
 Kudu 65
 Kwaron 67, 75, 99, 150
- Lamongan 65
langgar 145
lasykar hizbullah (the civilians who were trained to fight against the colonial military) 77 law faculty 37
 leadership structure 16, 42-3, 46, 51, 56, 80, 82, 85 legacy 31, 135, 138, 166 liberation 37
 Lily Zakiyah Munir 7, 33, 61, 78-9, 83-5, 97-8, 109-10, 128, 139, 151, 153-6 live-in 40, 144 local – autonomy 83
 – sensitivity 111, 129
 – society perspectives 111
 Lombok 53, 55, 141, 147
- Madrasah Aliyahs (Islamic senior high schools) 67
 Madrasah Banat 89-90, 111
 Madrasah Darul Ulum 89
 Madrasah Ibtidaiyahs (Islamic Elementary Schools) 66
 Madrasah Salafiyah 74, 82
 Madrasah Tsanawiyahs (Islamic junior high schools) 67
 Madura 40, 65, 71, 108, 149-50, 154 mahram 12, 100, 113, 117, 125, 155 main duties 18, 128
majales 111, 154
 Majelis Syuriah 57, 104
 Majelis taklim 44, 46-7, 51-2, 68, 94, 97, 99, 102, 104-6, 123, 150
 Majelis Tanfidziyah 57
majelis tarbiyah wa ta'lim (the board of education and instruction) 46, 55
Majelis Ulama Indonesia (Indonesian Ulama Council) 92
 Malang 29, 34, 65, 73, 77
 Malay peninsula 41, 121
 Malay script 96, 100
 Malaysia 46, 119, 123, 140-1, 145-8, 155
Manaqib 53-4, 68-9
 Mandarin 42
maqasid al-shari'a (the aims of the sharia) 84
 Maria Ulfah Ansor 59
 marital issues 83, 122 marriage 24, 27-8, 34, 51, 71-2, 87-8, 95-6, 107, 110, 118, 140, 149, 152-3 Masdar F. Mas'udi 59, 122, 142-3, 147, 154-6
Masjid 12, 42, 99
 Maskunambang 88, 151
maslahat 84
 Mathematics 151
mbah nyai 29, 134
mbok bakul 22
 Mecca 16, 33, 41, 44, 53, 71, 74, 76-7, 88-90, 93-4, 104, 111, 123, 144, 149-52
 Megaluh 65
 Megawati 50
 Middle East 16, 19-21, 25, 32, 41, 115, 122, 127, 137-41, 154 middle-upper class 16, 43, 108

- Mimbar Ulama* 92
 Minangkabau 27, 38, 40, 71, 144
 Ministry of National Education 39,
 149
 Ministry of Religious Affairs 18, 39, 63, 117-8, 137, 149 minority groups 73
 Misogyny 27
mita breuh 22
mita peung 22 modernist 18, 41, 137-8, 143, 150
 Mojoagung 65
 Mojokerto 65
 Mojowarno 65
Mondok 40, 71
 moral impact 21, 116 moral values 116, 118-9 mosque 12, 17-8, 43, 65-6, 75-6, 81, 89, 99, 116, 149-50
 motherhood 47-8 motherly duties 119
 movement 18, 21, 37-8, 47-8, 56,
 101, 104, 138, 143, 148, 150, 153
 MPRS (House of Assembly) 58
 Muallimat Sekolah Guru Putri
 (Female Teacher Education College)
 77
 Muballighah 12, 52, 92
 Muhammad Hatta 48
 Muhammad Yusuf 73
 Muhammadiyah 11, 18, 28, 32, 38,
 41, 142, 155
 Multicultural Women 115
musholla 18, 65, 75
 Muslim – community 16-7, 32, 35, 88, 92, 116, 144
 – countries 32, 123
 – group 18, 32
 Muslimat NU 12, 35, 56-60, 72-3, 75, 93, 97, 104-5, 136, 147, 152, 154
mustasyariah 58
 Mustofa Bisri 123, 143, 156
 Nahdlatul Ulama 11-2, 15, 18, 26, 31, 41, 55-7, 62-4, 77, 93, 98, 101, 112,
 138, 147-8
 Nahdlatul Wathan 53, 55, 141, 147
 National Education Day 39
 Nationalist 18, 37, 47-8, 56, 104 naughty children 129
 Nawawi al-Bantany 121, 123 negative impact 130-1 negotiate/negotiating 8, 17, 19-20, 35, 47, 50, 55, 94, 106, 108-9, 131,
 136, 139, 141, 151, 154
 New Order 18, 22, 39, 49-50, 56,
 102, 119, 138, 146, 153
 Ngoro 65, 77
 Ngusikan 65
 nineteenth century 24, 37, 123, 140, 150 ninggrat 22, 25, 142
 non-local culture 70
 North Sumatra 39, 140
 Nur Laili Rahmah 80, 82, 152
nyai 15-6, 18, 25, 27-30, 33-5, 43-4, 46-7, 50-6, 59-60, 105-8, 111-13, 115,
 117, 124, 127, 129, 132-6, 139, 141-2,
 145-6, 148
 Nyai Djamilah 46
 Nyai Abidah 7, 29, 56, 58, 69, 72-
 85, 87, 95-113, 128, 133, 136, 150-4
 Nyai Adlan Aly 7, 53
 Nyai Ahmad Dahlan 88
 Nyai Dasima 15
 Nyai Farida 7, 45, 54
 Nyai Hasbiyah Hamid 7, 29
 Nyai Khoiriyah 7-8, 15, 33, 53, 55,
 69-78, 82, 87-97, 100-1, 103-4, 106,
 108, 111-3, 133, 136, 151-3
 Nyai Mahshunah 7, 29, 78, 82, 87,
 100-7, 109, 112-3, 153-4
 Nyai Munjidah 46, 75
 Nyai Musyarrafah 45, 74-5
 Nyai Nafiqah 71, 87
 Nyai Nihayah 7
 Nyai Noer Cholida 148

- Nyai Nurkhadiyah 38
 Nyai Ruqaiyah 72-3
nyai sepuh 45, 97, 106
 Nyai Solichah Wahid Hasyim 58, 73, 95
 Nyai Ummu Salma 7, 29, 75, 157
 Nyai Yusuf Mashar 69, 72-3
- open-minded 108-9
 opportunity/opportunities 8, 23, 31, 34, 37, 39, 52-3, 58, 67-8, 87-9, 95, 97, 101-2, 108-11, 116, 128-9, 133
Orde Lama (Old Order) 18-9, 76
 P3M 12, 31, 56-7, 59-61, 83, 122, 136, 141, 144-5, 148, 151, 154
 Pacitan 150
 Pacul Gowang 34, 45, 66, 68, 153
 Padang 32, 143, 163
pahlawan nasional (national hero) 73
 Pakistan 32, 111, 154, 162
 Palembang 89
 Pare 67, 70
 Partai Kebangkitan Bangsa (PKB, National Awakening Party) 12, 63
 Partai Persatuan Pembangunan (PPP, United Development Party) 102 patriarchal 20, 26-7, 30-1, 33, 54-5, 84, 107, 111, 122, 125, 135-6 “– bargain” 20
 – values 33, 54, 107, 135 patriarchs 31
 Pattani 144
 pedagogical aspects 117
pelajaran umum 18, 40
pemberdayaan (empowerment) 61
 Pendidikan Guru Agama (Religious Teacher Training College) 12, 18, 77, 95
 Pendidikan Guru Agama NU Putri (NU Female Religious Teacher Training College) 18, 77, 95
 Pendidikan Guru Agama Putri Nahdlatul Ulama (NU Female Religious Teacher Training College) 77 pengadilan agama (religious court) 57, 98 pengasuh 80, 82, 92
 Perak 65, 148
Perempuan 12, 47, 61, 90, 92, 115, 139-40, 142-4, 146-8, 152-7
 Pergerakan Mahasiswa Islam Indonesia (PMII, Islamic Students Movement of Indonesia) 101
 Perguruan Putri Muallimat (female college of Muallimat) 75
Perukunan Jamaluddin 122
pesantren
 – al-Fatimiyah 45
 – al-Islahiyah 29
 – as a ‘little kingdom’ 43
 – Cukir 53, 66-7, 69
 – Darul Ulum 34, 73, 87, 89, 100
 – Denanyar 32, 38, 64, 69, 73-4, 76, 80, 95, 149
 – Lirboyo 34, 42, 45, 39
 – Manba’ul Ulum 42
 – Madrasatul Quran 69, 73, 139, 156
 – Maskunambang 88
 – Nahdlatul Wathan 53, 55, 141, 147
 – Paculgowang 34, 45, 66, 68, 153
 – Purwoasri 148
 – putri 12, 38, 42, 46, 71, 74, 82, 108
 – Putri al-Fatimiyah 46, 74
 – Putri al-Lathifiyah 42
 – Putri Salafiyah Syafiyah Seblak 29, 46, 75, 82
 – Risalah 7, 42
 – Salaf 117
 – Salafiyah Seblak 29, 34, 55, 66, 74-5, 78-82, 91, 96, 128, 151
 – Singosari Malang 73, 77
 – Siwalan Panji Sidoarjo 71, 89

- Tambak Beras 7, 29, 42, 45-6, 64, 71, 74-5, 149, 156
- Tebuireng 8, 18, 35, 46, 55, 63-73, 76, 88, 92, 95-8, 143, 149, 151-3, 156
- untuk Pemberdayaan Perempuan (Pesantren for women empowerment) 61
- Walisongo Cukir 69, 75
- Peshawar 111
- Peterongan 65
- PGA (Pendidikan Guru Agama) 12, 95-6
- physical segregation 55, 115, 120, 135
- pilgrim 41, 71, 89, 149
- PKB 12, 63, 103, 153
- PKK (Pembinaan Kesejahteraan Keluarga, Family Welfare Movement) 49
- Plandaan 65
- Ploso 65
- pluralism 73, 140, 142, 146
- policy 37, 48, 87, 98
- political
 - activities 18, 50, 56, 97, 102-3
 - campaign 109
 - party 11, 19, 57, 63, 102-4, 106
- polygamy 153
- pondok* 12, 17, 40-3, 46, 70, 81, 118, 131, 144-5, 147, 149-50, 152
- pornographic 130-1
- Post-Independence 39
- powerless 20
- PPP 12, 102-3, 153
- Pramoedya Ananta Toer 15
- Presidency 18, 23, 48, 50, 119
- primary school 31, 34, 39, 75
- private
 - education 87
 - politics 19, 30, 138, 142
 - realms 106
 - spheres 30, 52, 108, 134-5
- priyayi* 12, 22-34, 41
- Priyayization 24-5, 28, 51, 53, 106, 141-2, 145-6, 153, 157
- pro-gender perspectives 125
- prostitution 76
- protestants 65
- PUAN Amal Hayati 31, 33, 60-1, 92, 136, 156
- public
 - activities 31, 49, 103, 107, 123-4, 133
 - and private 17, 19, 21, 23, 30-2, 47, 52, 47, 106-8, 115, 128, 131, 134-8, 141
 - appointments 60
 - domain 31, 112, 115, 131-2
 - education 32, 87, 104, 106, 110, 115
 - engagement 105
 - facilities 116
 - life 44, 49, 108
 - participation 52, 111
 - positions 52, 60, 97, 106-7, 111, 136
 - positions and appointments 60
 - religious roles 90, 104
 - roles 13, 21, 35, 52, 87, 93, 94-5, 100, 103-6, 110-11
 - schooling 88
 - space 21, 22, 90, 98, 100, 106-7, 109, 111-3, 116, 122, 136, 139, 141, 154
 - spheres 21, 30, 49, 107-9, 112, 136
- Purwoasri Kediri 29, 117, 148
- pusat ngelmu* 44
- Qawwamuna* 110
- Quraish Shihab 21, 139
- Qur'an 45, 91, 130, 141, 152
- Qur'anic exegesis 121, 123, 131
- Qur'anic studies 45
- Qurratul 'Uyûn* 122, 125
- radicalism 84, 99

- Rahima 31, 59-61, 136, 155
 Rahmah al-Yunusiyah 38
 Ramadan 12, 44, 67-8, 71, 96, 117, 124, 128, 138, 149, 153, 156
rangkang 41
 Rasuna Said 38-9, 144 Raudhatul Athfals (Islamic kindergartens) 66 religious – credibility 89
 – femininity 115
 – figures 20, 91, 95, 110-1, 115
 – judge 52, 60, 98-100, 104, 106, 122-3
 – knowledge 46, 87
 renegotiate 20
 reproductive health 60, 84 responsibilities 24, 31, 57, 110, 116, 123, 126
romo 43, 133, 142 rural Java 18
- Said Aqiel Siradj 58, 147
 Santri 11-12, 15, 16-8, 25, 27-8, 34-5, 40-4, 47, 51-2, 63, 65, 67, 71, 76,
 87-9, 102, 115, 124, 134, 136, 145-7, 150, 153-4
santri ibuwism 25, 28, 35, 47, 52, 146, 153
santri kelana 71
 santriwati 12, 27, 102, 115, 128, 134, 154
 Saudi Arabia 122
 Sayid Muchsin Musana 89
 second marriage 88
 Sekolah Hakim Agama Negeri 98
 Sekolah Muallimat 18, 32
selendang 112
 Semarang 38, 150
Shi'a 111-2 significant figures 93
 single-sex 116
 Sinta Nuriyah A.Wahid 33, 143, 156
 Sjahrir 49, 140, 146 social charity 56 socio-economic status 16 sociological factors 122 socio-political 21, 56, 84, 109, 122
 Soekarno 104
 Soka University Tokyo 148
 Sokhnas Magot Diop 20 spatial segregation 17
 state ibuwism 47, 49
 State Institute for Islamic Studies
 Sunan Kalijaga 101
 stereotype 98
 structural leadership 30, 79-80, 93
Suara Ibu Peduli (The Voice of Caring Mothers) 50 sub-culture 16, 22
sufi 53
 Suharto 18, 48-50, 102, 119, 138 sultan 43, 55
 Sumatra Tawalib 38
sumber ngelmu 89
 Sumobito 65
sunnah (prophet tradition) 59
 Surabaya 18, 57, 92, 102
Surau 12, 27, 39, 40-1, 53, 144-5
Swara Rahima 61, 155
 Syaikh Ahmad Khatib al-
 Minangkabau 71
 Syaikh Arsyad al-Banjary 89
 Syaikh Mahfudz al-Tirmasi 71
 Syaikh Nawawi al-Bantany 121
 Syarikat Islam 74, 150
 Syeikh Yasin al-Fadany 89
syukuran (celebration) 117
Syuriah 57-8, 93, 104, 152
- Ta'lim Muta'allim* 44
tabir (curtain) 58
tafsir (Quranic exegesis) 121
 Taman Siswa 37
 Tanara 123
tarekat 16, 53, 137, 144, 156
 Tasikmalaya 37
tausiyah 53, 117, 132

- Tebuireng 8, 18, 35, 46, 55, 63-73, 76, 88, 91-2, 95-6, 98, 143, 149, 151-3, 156
- Tembelang 65
- terrorism 26, 84, 99
- theology 97, 121
- tolerance 94
- traditional Islam II-2, 26, 40, 44, 53, 147
- traditional norms III
- Tremas 150
- Tuan Guru 53, 55
- Tuan Guru Zainuddin 55
- twentieth century 16, 32, 37, 47, 88-9, 93, 135, 137-8, 144, 150, 154-5
- ulama Jawi* 71, 121, 123
- ulama perempuan* 90, 92, 144, 152
- Umar Faruq 79-80, 82, 153
- University of Indonesia 115
- Uqûd al-Lujjâyn* 31, 122-3, 125, 127-8, 142-3, 150, 156
- Ustazah 12, 27, 52, 132
- values of respectability III-2
- veiling 112
- vice-president 48
- victims of subordination 102
- Wahab Chasbullah 18, 42, 46, 63, 149
- Wahid Hasyim 18, 58, 60, 70, 72-3, 78, 95-7, 110, 137, 149, 151-2
- wajib* [obligatory] 97
- wanita* 47, 49-50, 90, 140, 142-3, 147, 150, 155-7
- WCC (Women Crisis Centre) 29
- West Sumatra 12, 22, 38, 41, 143-4, 150
- Western schools 32
- Western-Dutch education 87
- Western-style education 23
- wife 12, 15, 18, 25, 38, 44-5, 48-9, 54, 71, 74-8, 82, 89, 95-6, 107, 110-111, 116, 119, 123-6, 133, 136, 142, 146, 149, 151, 156
- womanhood 17, 22-4, 47, 49, 53
- women's issue 8, 25, 31, 56-61, 106, 109, 122
- women's live 16, 19, 21-3, 27, 30, 127, 135-6
- wong cilik* 22-3, 145
- Wonosalam 65
- Yayasan Kesajjahteraan Fatayat 60
- Yogyakarta 37, 101, 137-9, 142-4, 148-50, 152, 154, 156
- Zainuddin Labay el-Yunusiyy 38

PUBLICATIONS SERIES

Josine Stremmelaar and Paul van der Velde (eds.)
What about Asia? Revisiting Asian Studies
2006 (ISBN 978 90 5356 959 7)

Monographs

Alex McKay
Their Footprints Remain. Biomedical Beginnings Across the Indo-Tibetan Frontier
Monographs 1
2007 (ISBN 978 90 5356 518 6)

Masae Kato
Women's Rights? The Politics of Eugenic Abortion in Modern Japan
Monographs 2
2009 (ISBN 978 90 5356 793 7)

Jeroen de Kloet
China with a Cut. Globalisation, Urban Youth and Popular Music
Monographs 3
2010 (ISBN 978 90 8964 162 5)

Rituparna Roy
South Asian Partition Fiction in English. From Khushwant Singh to Amitav Ghosh
Monographs 4
2010 (ISBN 978 90 8964 245 5)

Chaiyakorn Kiatpongsan
The EU-Thailand Relations. Tracing the Patterns of New Bilateralism
Monographs 5
2011 (ISBN 978 90 8964 164 9)

Olena Mykal

The EU-Japan Security Dialogue. Invisible but Comprehensive

Monographs 6

2011 (ISBN 978 90 8964 163 2)

Kah Seng Loh, Edgar Liao, Cheng Tju Lim and Guo-Quan Seng

The University Socialist Club and the Contest for Malaya. Tangled Strands of Modernity

Monographs 7

2012 (ISBN 978 90 8964 409 1)

Edited Volumes

Gijsbert Oonk (ed.)

Global Indian Diasporas. Exploring Trajectories of Migration and Theory

Edited Volumes 1

2007 (ISBN 978 90 5356 035 8)

Wen-Shan Yang and Melody Chia-Wen Lu (eds.)

Asian Cross-border Marriage Migration. Demographic Patterns and Social Issues

Edited Volumes 2

2010 (ISBN 978 90 8964 054 3)

Margaret Sleeboom-Faulkner (ed.)

Frameworks of Choice. Predictive and Genetic Testing in Asia

Edited Volumes 3

2010 (ISBN 978 90 8964 165 6)

Birgit Abels (ed.)

Austronesian Soundscapes. Performing Arts in Oceania and Southeast Asia

Edited Volumes 4

2011 (ISBN 978 90 8964 085 7)

Dipika Mukherjee and Maya Khemlani David (eds.)

National Language Planning and Language Shifts in Malaysian Minority Communities

Edited Volumes 5

2011 (ISBN 978 90 8964 271 4)

Gregory Bracken (ed.)

Aspects of Urbanization in China. Shanghai, Hong Kong, Guangzhou

Edited Volumes 6

2012 (ISBN 978 90 8964 398 8)

Barak Kalir and Malini Sur (eds.)

Transnational Flows and Permissive Politics. Ethnographies of Human Mobilities in Asia

Edited Volumes 7

2012 (ISBN 978 90 8964 408 4)

Until currently there have been no specific publications, particularly in English, on women in traditional Islamic educational institutions in Indonesia, known as pesantren, which played a significant role in shaping the gender issues in the Indonesian Muslim community. This informative and insightful book contributes to two booming fields in Indonesian studies: the study of Islam and the study of Muslim women. It also adds a new perspective to the English-language literature on Muslim women outside the Middle-Eastern or Sub-Indian continent communities context, which used to dominate the scholarly discussion or publication in this field.

Eka Srimulyani lectures in Sociology at the State Institute for Islamic Studies in Banda Aceh, Indonesia.

“(...) Here Eka Srimulyani gives us an insider’s view of the little-known contribution of women to Islamic education.”

— Susan Blackburn, Monash University

“(...) provides us with a rich history and ethnography of pesantren women. The work is certain to become a classic in the study of Indonesian Islam.”

— Robert Hefner, Boston University

“(...) the first [book] to provide a view of the life world of women in the East Javanese pesantren (...) helps us understand why Muslim feminism has found much broader grassroots support in Indonesia than in most other countries.”

— Martin van Bruinessen, Utrecht University

ISBN 978 90 8964 421 3

AMSTERDAM UNIVERSITY PRESS
www.aup.nl