The castellan of the Dardanelles previously informed us that fifty-eight Christian women who left the island of Andros to go to Istanbul had been detained at the Dardanelles. Following our instructions at that time, he dispatched them to Marmara Island, Ekinlik,⁴ Paşalimanı Island, and Erdek, and the Greek Orthodox patriarch communicated this matter to the metropolitans and kocabasis through letters. Later on, the patriarch explained the situation regarding the abovementioned Christian women, and we granted his request for lifting the ban on travel with our verbal permission. When the metropolitans of Kapıdağ⁵ and Paşalimanı acted upon our permission, based on the instruction of the patriarch, you refused to issue the travel permits, due to the lack of written orders. Having relayed this information, the patriarch appealed to us in writing that the travel of those Christian women to Istanbul should not be hindered. These Christians consist of feeble people and women, who suffer much misery in their places of detainment. Thus, we gave our permission to travel out of compassion. This letter is to instruct you to allow those Christians to travel to Istanbul, based on our orders and the relevant documents sent by the patriarch previously. We take this occasion to encourage you to continue to prohibit anyone without a permit from traveling.

[582/97, regarding precautions against a possible Greek assault through the Dardanelles] To the Mutasarrıf of Ormenio [Esad Pasha] March 14, 1826

The Castellan of the Dardanelles Vizier Mustafa Pasha communicated to us the intelligence he obtained from a Russian captain, who arrived at the Dardanelles wounded by the bandits. As he was with the bandits, he said he knew that, praise be to God, they realized the crushing might of Islam everywhere and, losing hope in their false cause, they allegedly decided to risk death by plotting to force their way into the Dardanelles aboard forty to fifty vessels of various sizes in the days of the strong southwesterly winds of March. Mustafa Pasha pleaded with us to dispatch a sufficient number of troops from Rumelia, which he requires greatly these days, as he has to guard five to six locations with the troops under his command, a task that has proved challenging already. In the past we have received reports about these bandits having such wicked designs, according to which they planned to raid the strait, taking advantage of the southwesterly winds with the vain hope of causing some sensation. We then ordered the dispatch of artillery units to reinforce the fortresses and redoubts on the strait, upon the imperial decree, and also instructed you to protect the coasts that fell under your administrative authority against the tricks of the enemy. This recent correspondence of Mustafa Pasha that we described above contains the kind of news that confirms the previous intelligence. We plead with God the Revenger and Subduer day and night to deny them such an opportunity and vanquish them soon by meting out due punishment. That said, it is still necessary to exercise some caution in the present conditions, and we must expect all sorts of treason and malice from these infidel bandits, as they vowed to run the risk of their life. Should we order the troops requested by Mustafa Pasha from Anatolian provinces, it would take quite long for them to reach their assigned posts, and they would not render due service, as is clear from past experience. Moreover, Mustafa Pasha specifically demanded Rumeliot troops. Therefore, we conceived of a measure that appeared to us as the only feasible solution: this envisions your dispatch of one thousand robust and able men immediately for a service period of two months, until the suitable season for the rumored attack of the infidels is over. His Imperial Majesty approved this measure and willed you to send at once all the mercenaries currently serving under your company commander and the chief musketeer in your retinue under the command of a strong-willed man capable of keeping these men in line. You shall fill the missing ranks in this contingent of one thousand men later and rush the fresh men behind them. You shall instruct the commander of the contingent to put the men to good use in case of battle and obey all orders of Mustafa Pasha, as if he were part of his retinue. Any accusation of insubordination by Mustafa Pasha would require the commander's punishment. As per the imperial will, you shall also protect the coastline up to Enez from the trickery of the enemy. We have communicated to Mustafa Pasha that we would send the stipends and rations of this contingent of salaried troops, as well as managing the reinforcement of the fortifications of the Dardanelles. When you receive this letter of ours, you, as a man of prudence, competence, and diligence, should keep the news secret. We ask you to exert yourself to send the available troops in your retinue in advance to the strait under a strong and capable commander. You should then send fresh troops behind in full arms to make up the deficit in manpower in the unit without wasting a single moment. We expect you to negotiate the monthly payment of these men on the basis of proximity to the front, with a view to favor the treasury, and inform Mustafa Pasha and us about the agreed sum. You should also instruct the commander of the contingent to encourage the men to persevere in a likely battle. He must obey all orders of Mustafa Pasha with devotion, as if he were part of his retinue, and clearly know that we will punish him immediately upon any accusation from Mustafa Pasha of insubordination. As we always point out in our correspondence to you, you shall spare no efforts to protect the coasts up to Enez from the tricks of the enemy and attacks of the foe.

[582/101, regarding the siege of Missolonghi] To the Grand Admiral [Mehmed Hüsrev Pasha] [No date]

We have received Your Excellency's correspondence in which you confirm the arrival of our letter that urges you to exert your best efforts to subjugate Missolonghi together with Ibrahim Pasha, Governor of the Morea and Jeddah, and Mehmed Resid Pasha, Governor of Rumelia, for whose stay at the siege an imperial edict has been issued. Your Excellency expresses your pleasure to learn that His Imperial Majesty's will was thus manifested, so as to keep Mehmed Reşid Pasha at the siege. According to your correspondence, Ibrahim Pasha wrote to you on the 16th day of the month of Receb [February 24, 1826] that he would give no respite to Missolonghi from cannon and mortar fire, and so you delivered to him whatever he demanded to this end. You also report that pirate boats attempted to bring aid to Missolonghi five or six times, but were forced to retreat with losses. Now that Missolonghi has been besieged completely from land and sea, you pray for its imminent fall. As for provisions, you point out that the navy ran out of clarified butter and olive oil. After you bought on the spot more than 2000 ktyyes of olive oil at the rate of 3.5 piasters per ktyye in order to light the deck lanterns, an Austrian-flagged ship loaded with supplies entered the gulf. Thus, you also bought from it 25,613 ktyyes of olive oil, paying 75 paras per ktyye, as well as 31,314 ktyyes of olives, paying 25 paras per ktyye. In addition, you made purchases of hardtack from several boats. You suggest that all these purchases supplied the imperial navy with provisions to last for two months. As you have brought to our attention previously, the governor of Rumelia carried out an investigation of the case of the British assistance to Greeks, during which his patrolling troops coincidentally intercepted the sum sent as a stipend from Nafplio to Missolonghi. Although you had inquired into this matter by sending a communication right away to Pişel [uncertain reading, unidentified person], British commander of the Ionian Islands, you have not received a response as of yet. Your Excellency assures us that you will discuss his response and keep us informed about the process. The contents of your communication and the letters Your Excellency forwarded to the superintendent of the imperial arsenal have thus become known to us, and we have submitted the documents to His Imperial Majesty for review. Ibrahim Pasha and Mehmed Reșid Pasha have already sent a joint letter to the effect that they established a determined siege of Missolonghi; we pray for a prompt end to this affair. His Imperial Majesty is pleased with the fact that you eliminated the problem of the shortage of foodstuffs by thus replenishing the two months' supplies of the navy. As per His Imperial Majesty's will, we are going to send you from the naval treasury the sum of money to cover the cost of your purchase of olive oil and olives, although we had previously ordered olive oil for the navy from Lesbos. This letter is to encourage you to exert yourself in unison with Ibrahim Pasha and Mehmed Reşid Pasha to the rescue of Missolonghi from the damned hands of the infidels as soon as possible.

Postscript: From the note you sent to the superintendent of the imperial arsenal, we understand that you want him to dispatch some quantity of tar and pitch with the battleships prepared for the spring campaign. We inform you with this letter that we cautioned him to take care of the matter, since tar and pitch are much needed by the ships of the imperial navy.

[582/106, regarding the insurance agents in Alexandria refusing to insure ships carrying provisions to the Morea because of Lord Cochrane's operations] To the Governor of the Morea [Ibrahim Pasha] and the Grand Admiral [Mehmed Hüsrev Pasha], separately

March 17, 1826

We have communicated to you several times that we have approached Your Excellency's glorious father, Mehmed Ali Pasha, Governor of Egypt, with a commission to supply the imperial navy and various other ships with four months of provisions, due to the current hardships involved in their shipment from Istanbul. In his present correspondence, Mehmed Ali Pasha states that he has ordered the preparation and shipment of three months of provisions immediately after receiving our request and dispatched the related documents to Your Excellency, to the grand admiral, and to his own agent at the Porte, Necib Efendi, who is presently at your side. The agreement with the insurance agents in Alexandria was that they charged a sum equal to 8% of the value of the six months of provisions that arrived in Methoni safe and secure and, in case of loss or damage, they pledged to pay a sum equal to 70% of the value of the same load in compensation. Therefore, Mehmed Ali Pasha offered them to insure the present load of three months of provisions on the same terms and informed his translator in Alexandria accordingly. The translator, nevertheless, communicated to Mehmed Ali Pasha that letters had arrived for the merchants of Alexandria from their partners in England, passing on the news that the British General Cochrane has left England for France in order to join the American ships in Marseilles before sailing to the "lands of Rum" [cânib-i Rum, referring to the non-Arab domains of the Ottoman Empire]. The said insurers, the translator continued, refused to insure the provisions for the time being, as they are also business partners of the merchants of Alexandria. Thus, Mehmed Ali Pasha decided to send half of the provisions to the imperial navy by offering the merchants an 8% bonus, apart from the freight payment, should they make a safe delivery and absolving them from all responsibility for any loss or damage to the load. He points out that, should the news turn out to be correct, the grand admiral would have to send to Alexandria the merchant ships available in the imperial navy in the escort of a number of battleships in order to receive the other half of the provisions. A few days ago, a communication arrived from the grand admiral, stating that the imperial navy has two months of provisions. This, coupled with the provisions to be sent by Mehmed Ali Pasha, which are adequate for 1.5 months, and the provisions that we will send with the fleet, will save the imperial navy from suffering any shortage of rations. As for General Cochrane, we have read in some newspapers that he arrived at Zakynthos and Corfu, but we could not confirm the information. This letter is for your information only that we informed Mehmed Ali Pasha of His Imperial Majesty's will. His Imperial Majesty thinks that the provisions listed above should support the imperial navy sufficiently and that there is no need at the moment to send a fleet to Alexandria to receive the remainder of the provisions from Egypt.

[582/108, regarding the dispatch of Rumeliot troops to the Dardanelles] Note to the Mutasarrıf of Ormenio [Esad Pasha] March 18, 1826

We had related to Your Excellency the news concerning the infidels' plan to enter the Dardanelles with a strong southwesterly wind, God forbid. Then, the castellan of Gallipoli confirmed the news that the bandits were entertaining vain hopes to carry out this abominable plan. This prompted us to instruct you a few days ago to send the available mercenaries serving with your company commander and the chief musketeer in your retinue in advance to the strait under a strong and capable commander; and to rush fresh troops behind to make up the deficit in manpower in the unit without wasting a single moment. We believe that you have already received His Imperial Majesty's decree and that you will duly carry it out. There is no question that these infidels will meet failure in this attempt, which they plan to make in reaction to the recent manifestation of the might of Islam. Nevertheless, they have turned into suicide soldiers [ölüm eri] and are determined to risk death and treacherously attack here and there like mad dogs. Hence, it is necessary to reinforce the strait to repel such a perfidious attack. We trust that you will do your best to serve His Imperial Majesty and assume that you have already dispatched the available mercenaries in your retinue to the strait. My dear brother, I would like you to confirm your implementation of the aforementioned imperial order, since the matter requires full attentiveness and quick response. In addition, we had previously let you know about His Imperial Majesty's decree that ordered you to set aside an agreed quantity of flour from among the grain stocked in Enez and currently in Tekirdağ en route to Istanbul. Based on His Imperial Majesty's will, you should ship these provisions immediately to the strait for the consumption of your troops to be deployed there. We would like to reiterate this order in this letter of ours as well.

[582/110, regarding the capture of the island of Vasiladi, off Missolonghi] To the Governor of the Morea [Ibrahim Pasha] and the Governor of Rumelia [Reşid Pasha (Kütahi)]

March 22, 1826

We have received Your Excellencies' joint letter on the progress of the siege [of Missolonghi]. As required by your commission and demanded by the worldfamous bravery, chivalry, and valor inherent in your character, you devotedly continued with the siege of Missolonghi with fortitude and decided to attack the island of Vasiladi¹ to bring more pressure on Missolonghi, for this island is the key to the subjugation of Missolonghi from the sea. You report that you had rafts constructed and men deployed on them under the command of Hüseyin Bey, the commander of the forces [ser-cesme] on Crete, and sent them forward in the escort of cutters and boats. These forces captured the island after engaging the enemy successfully on the last day of the month of Receb [March 10, 1826], the details of which, you pointed out, were to be found in the report of Hüsnü Bey and Necib Efendi. The letter of these functionaries of ours is indeed a testimony to the diligent service of our victorious troops and your attentiveness to this sacred task. We hope that the capture of the island by a bold and valiant assault of the aforementioned troops is a sign of the conquest of Missolonghi in the forthcoming days. With pride and joy, we submitted your letter to His Imperial Majesty, who, having learned of your victory, was much pleased. We have full confidence that you will make all of us jubilant by conquering Missolonghi soon, for you devote yourself to perform your duty with your innate qualities of prowess and courage. We take the liberty to remind you, not of the necessity, to serve diligently, for that would be stating the obvious. We already know that you spare no efforts to perform your duty in the best possible way. God only knows how much we pray day and night to receive the news of the conquest of Missolonghi. We write this letter to encourage you to perform deeds of bravery and dignity that are to become a source of joy for elites and commoners alike and memorable feats for posterity.

[582/112, regarding the attack on Aitoliko] To Hüsnü Bey [Chief Halberdier of the Imperial Council] and Necib Efendi [Superintendent of the Imperial Gunpowder Mills and the governor of Egypt's agent at the Sublime Porte] March 22, 1826

We have received your joint correspondence with the appended documents in which you relate the details of the subjugation of the island of Vasiladi, across from Missolonghi. This island, as you say, is the key to the conquest of Missolonghi and thereby was heavily reinforced by the infidel bandits. As its capture was necessary, the victorious soldiers assaulted the island under heavy enemy fire successfully. You made an inventory of the captured guns and ammunition after occupying the island, and that is to be found appended to your correspondence. You also inform us that the construction of the tracks that are essential for attacking Missolonghi from land and sea are completed. You describe the way in which you decided to storm Missolonghi upon the capture of the island of Aitoliko, which is located two hours away from the fortress. We have been relieved and very pleased by the subjugation of the island of Vasiladi, which, we hope, is a sign of the imminent seizure of Missolonghi from the damned hands of the infidels. We received this news also from Ibrahim Pasha, Governor of Jeddah and the Governor and Commander-in-Chief with full powers of the Morea, as well as Mehmed Reşid Pasha, Governor and Commander-in-Chief of Rumelia, and submitted their communications to His Imperial Majesty, who had his imperial writ inscribed on them, praying for victory. As is apparent from your reports, the infidels had indeed turned the aforementioned island [Vasiladi] into a full-fledged fort, for they consider Missolonghi as their sanctuary. God willing, just as they could not withstand the brave assault of our victorious troops on the island [Vasiladi], they will be overwhelmed and crushed in Aitoliko and Missolonghi as well. This letter is to tell you of our joy for your good news and that we are urgently waiting for the news of victory.

[582/115, regarding the refusal of British mediation between the Sublime Porte and the Greek revolutionaries] To the Grand Admiral [Mehmed Hüsrev Pasha] March 27, 1826

In a previous communication, the governor of Rumelia informed us that the British merchants had gathered 200,000 purses of piasters to deliver to the Greek bandits in trimonthly installments of 10,000 purses of piasters. His patrols intercepted en route to Missolonghi 1,200 purses of piasters, sent as part of the first installment to Missolonghi as military pay. In response, we sent him a copy of the official and detailed memorandum we delivered to the British ambassador in Istanbul, in which we demanded the prevention of British financial aid to the brigands. Your official correspondence reached us after we rushed a letter to you, asking for your consultation on this matter. You relate that you invited Pişel [uncertain reading, unidentified person], the naval commander of the Ionian Islands, to discuss this matter with you, which he accepted. However, he then sent word that, when he had left Zakynthos to meet you, his superiors suddenly called him to Malta and that he would meet you subsequently. You inform us in your correspondence that you would duly express our concerns on this subject in the prospective meeting and submit your report. There is no need to mention to you that it is the habit of the Frankish states to resort to deceits and ruses in pursuing political goals and that one should never trust them. The new British ambassador [Stratford Canning] pleaded for an audience immediately after his arrival in Istanbul [October 1825], and a conference was held with him at the residence of the reisülküttab, at which the former began by expressing his government's view on the Greeks. The reisülküttab, in turn, drew his attention to the full support of the local British functionaries for the Greeks and followed the official line drawn by the abovementioned official memorandum; the details of the negotiation can be found in the minutes of the meeting. The gist of the official British message conveyed by the ambassador is that the Russians are intent on declaring war against the Sublime State because of the Greek question and that the British government has the good will to reconciliate the Sublime State and the Greeks in order to nullify the Russian intention. The ambassador demanded the discussion of the British proposal by the high dignitaries of His Imperial Majesty and asked for a concrete answer if the Sublime State would consent to the British intermediation. After listening to the minutes of this conference in the Imperial Council held at the Sublime Porte, the high dignitaries present agreed on the rejection of the British proposal, as in the past, when Britain and the powers known as the Four Allied States, namely Russia, Austria, France, and Prussia, had made similar offers on different occasions.

Found in contradiction with the holy law and sovereignty rights, the Sublime State then adamantly refused to be reconciled with the Greeks through their intermediation, and no such offers have been heard again since then. The British are now in haste to repeat this offer, although they refrained from being involved in similar offers by the Four Allied States to this effect in the past. This can be explained by the fact that the failure in the suppression of the Greek sedition caused the British to be greedy in the last two years; they have been contemplating taking the Morea under their own control, similar to the case in the Ionian Islands, for which reason they are currently giving aid to the Greeks. The participants in the consultation also questioned the likelihood of a Russian aggression. The late Russian Emperor Alexander had resolved to declare war on the Sublime State because of the Greek question, but he perished before realizing his goal, praise be to God.¹ Most probably, the British are concerned with the grave sedition and rebellion raging on in Russia, as well as the imminent fall of Missolonghi, for which reason they attempt to achieve their goal immediately by intimidating the Sublime State with Russians [i.e. a possible war with Russia]. According to the news, the change of British policy in the last two years resulted from the designs of the British Prime Minister [sic] Canning.² It is plausible that the prime minister [sic] attempts to gain popularity in his country by having the consent of the Sublime State to the British offer, which would place the Greeks under British influence, so that he would be able to say: "You see, I managed the affair without letting your [monetary] aid for the Greeks go to waste." Greeks [Rum] raised this sedition and rebelled on the perverted claim that they were the genuine Greek [Yunan] government, aiming to restore past administration of their own by refusing to be the reava of the Exalted Sultanate. The Frankish offer to reconciliate the two sides is based on their decision to advance the vain claims of the Greeks by obtaining many privileges that would end their reaya status completely and bestow them with a government. God forbid, this would cause a multitude of drawbacks that are likely to bring graver harm than the declaration of war by Russia or Britain. In consideration of the holy law and sovereignty rights, the participants in the Imperial Council decided unanimously to advise the rejection of the British proposal resolutely, as was the case with the Four Allied States in the past. Following His Imperial Majesty's will based on this suggestion, the reisülküttab officially told the British ambassador that the Sublime

² George Canning was not prime minister at the time, but secretary of state for foreign affairs between September 1822 and April 1827.

State had no choice but to refuse the British proposal as before, since it ran contrary to [our] religion and the Muhammadan law. Considering that we must keep you informed about this development, we have sent you a copy of the aforementioned minutes of the Imperial Council and the details of the conference at the residence of the reisülküttab along with this letter of ours. It goes without saying that you should keep this secret. When you negotiate with the local British commander, you should follow the official line as contoured in these documents and try to have them stop aiding the Greeks.

[582/121, regarding the capture of Aitoliko] To Hüsnü Bey [Chief Halberdier of the Imperial Council] and Necib Efendi [Superintendent of the Imperial Gunpowder Mills and the governor of Egypt's agent at the Sublime Porte] March 31, 1826

We have received your joint communication, as well as the joint correspondence of Ibrahim Pasha, Governor of Jeddah and Governor and Commanderin-Chief with full powers of the Morea, and Mehmed Resid Pasha, Governor and Commander-in-Chief of Rumelia. You recount that after the occupation of the island of Vasiladi, which had been communicated to us previously, our troops attacked the tiny island [Dolmas] whose distance from Vasiladi was thrice the range of a cannon, for the downfallen infidels, numbering more than two hundred, had reinforced this place by erecting redoubts and placing guns, turning it into a nest of misfortune.¹ As a felicitous prelude to the capture of the island of Aitoliko-which is to the west of Missolonghi-the Muslim warriors undertook an offensive from land and sea, and, being unable to withstand the might of our troops, more than two hundred wicked infidels were crushed and ruined during the invasion of the island. Afterward, Ibrahim Pasha and Resid Pasha together launched an offensive on Aitoliko, upon which the infidels inside [the fortress of Aitoliko] wanted to submit peacefully. By the granting of mercy, men, women, and children totaling 3,118 walked out. You point out in your communication that you also sent the list of those martyred and injured in action, as well as a list of the captured guns and boats. This news of the crushing of the infidels is such a relief for the Muslims and an occasion for merriment. His Imperial Majesty was pleased with the news and had his imperial writ inscribed on the abovementioned correspondence that we submitted to him. We sent appreciative letters to Ibrahim Pasha and Resid Pasha in response. We expect that, from now on, the infidels will not be able to withstand the crushing might of Islam anywhere and that they will be crushed. God willing, Missolonghi has also fallen by now. While you indicated in your communication that the list of the captured guns and boats was included in the dispatch, they were not present in the package; we have no doubt that they were left out of the dispatch mistakenly. This note is to encourage both of you to continue working together to perform your tasks diligently.

¹ Referring to the Battle of Dolmas, which took place on March 12, 1825. Dolmas was defended by Grigoris Liakatas, who was in command of three hundred men from Aitoliko.

[582/124, regarding the preparations for the campaign on Athens] To the Governor of Rumelia [Mehmed Reşid Pasha (Kütahi)] April 5, 1826

We have received Your Excellency's past and present communications about your new commission in and around Athens and submitted them to His Imperial Majesty. You plead with us to make the arrangements and send the imperial orders for the collection of provisions, the substitution fee in lieu of militia levy, and pack animals in advance, so that after the fall of Missolonghi you could perform your duty of removing the filthy bodies of the bandits from Athens and its vicinity. You suggest that we send imperial decrees to Shkodër, Ohrid, and Elbasan, commuting the soldier levy into cash substitution this year and that the imperial navy should deliver cannons, cannon balls, and ammunition, for it would be difficult to bring them to Athens from Euboea. The contents of Your Excellency's communication have thus become known to us, and we have submitted your letters to His Imperial Majesty for review. Obviously, it is imperative to support your troops in Amfissa and Athens by arranging for the pay and provisions for a six-month period, as well as the pack animals, in a timely fashion. While the populace in the *kaza*s of Rumelia and Anatolia have grown poor due to the consecutive soldier, animal, and provision levies in the last couple of years, we have no other option than collecting compensation fees as much as possible from these localities this year as well. With the approval of His Imperial Majesty, we made the following decisions. In order to alleviate the situation, some towns are to pay one third of the previous year's rate and others two thirds. Also, we will decrease the burden on the local poor by dispatching the relevant imperial decrees to the governors and mutasarrufs through their agents in Istanbul rather than sending them by apparitors, so that the locals would be relieved of paying service fees to the apparitors. Accordingly, the governors will collect the cash compensations and forward them to the imperial mint. The ayans, voivodes, and deputy governors of twenty-eight kazas in Rumelia do not have agents who transact their affairs in Istanbul. Although some of these kazas are under your jurisdiction, you are too busy to send apparitors to collect the compensation fees from them. Thus, each apparitor is to be responsible to deliver the relevant imperial decrees to three to four of these localities, thereby reducing the burden on the populace. We understand from the content of your correspondence that the pack animals for the previous year's campaign were not sent in the stipulated numbers and that most of those requisitioned were frail and perished on the road. Thus, we included in the imperial orders the stipulation that the locals should deliver to the head of the local post station [kiracıbaşı] robust animals and that we would have them compensate for the missing ones again, should the pack animals be frail and lacking in number. Rumor has it that last year the recruited animals were denied provender in the kazas along the road to the front and they perished. Therefore, we entrusted with the commissioners the necessary imperial orders to the effect that the kazas should give free provender to the pack animals for the night they stay in the kazas until they reach your side. We sent these imperial orders concerning the substitution fee to the kazas and the collection of pack animals to the head of the local post station. We also sent you an imperial order for your information about these decisions. As for your suggestion of collecting substitution fees in lieu of soldiers from Shkodër, Ohrid, and Elbasan, there is no precedence for this practice in these [Albanian] sancaks. Thus, as per His Imperial Majesty's will, we sent you an imperial order to the effect of collecting soldiers from these sancaks. As the prudent governor and commander-in-chief of Rumelia, we deem it proper that you communicate with Mustafa Pasha [Bushati], Mutasarrıf of these sancaks, to deliver the aforementioned imperial decree. That said, you are free to seek a way to implement the collection of the substitution fees rather than raising men. You also ask for permission to obtain cannon and cannon balls from the imperial navy. However, the grand admiral will obviously need the naval armament present in the navy. We are afraid that we cannot ship them either by the fleet that will sail away from Istanbul, on the consideration that the fleet may not have enough space to load the equipment and the crew you are asking for. Even if it does, it may arrive late at Euboea to deliver them to you, due to the vicissitude of the sea. On the other hand, it is incumbent on us to give you unconditional support in this matter of religion and keep you fully equipped. Therefore, we dispatched the following overland to Larissa, where they will be awaiting further orders from you to join your forces, once you leave Missolonghi for Amfissa and Athens: two mortars of 22 calibers with full equipment from the inventory of the imperial shell factory, along with four companies of bombardiers, two companies for each mortar; two companies from the corps of miners with full equipment; a culverin-type cannon with its ammunition; one thousand bombshells for each mortar, making two thousand in total; five hundred cases of ball cartridges and five hundred barrels of gunpowder from the inventory of the imperial armory; two thousand solid balls of 7 calibers from the foundry in Eleftheroupoli; two companies of cannoneers, a company of waggoneers, 4 howitzers of 5 calibers, along with 4,000 bombshells in suitable calibers, from the inventory of the imperial foundry; and finally, two competent engineers to serve under you. We instructed the mutasarrıf of Trikala to safeguard these armaments and ammunition and to supply the companies with the basic provisions. We will handle the matter of the provisions and keep you informed about it. We ask you by this letter to exert yourself to perform your duties until then.

[582/126, regarding the appointment of a new castellan to Nafpaktos and Acarnania]

To Ali Namık Pasha, who was given the Sancaks of Nafpaktos and Acarnania April 5, 1826

The governor of Rumelia brought to our attention that the appointment of a gallant and diligent vizier as the castellan of Nafpaktos and Acarnania would be imperative to guard Missolonghi, Nafpaktos, and the Castles of the Morea and Rumelia [Rio and Antirrio], as well as to eliminate the brigands who got away from the sword, who might appear in the vicinity again after the imminent conquest of Missolonghi. As the governor of Rumelia would have to report to his new post in Amfissa and Athens afterward to fight the infidel brigands, it is indeed necessary to put in charge a diligent man with determination who is familiar with the region, such as yourself, in order to duly protect Missolonghi, Nafpaktos, and the Castles of the Morea and Rumelia. Besides, you have familiarized yourself in the past with the ways of the infidels of that vicinity as a member of the retinue of the late Hurşid Pasha. It is beyond doubt that you will spare no efforts to serve the Sublime State and [our] religion in this capacity. His Imperial Majesty also shares this opinion and wills you to be the castellan of the sancaks of Acarnania and Nafpaktos. Based on this, we have delivered to you through your agent in Istanbul the relevant appointment order, along with 75,000 piasters as a gift from His Imperial Majesty, who ordered us to support you financially and in terms of manpower. The governor of Rumelia will rush to his new post to crush the brigands after the fall of Missolonghi, which is only a matter of time. While we are sure that you will show eagerness to perform your duties, you would be unable to raise men and collect provisions in such a short time. Therefore, we have asked the governor of Rumelia to support you fully in this matter and we sent your appointment orders to him through his agent in Istanbul as well. This letter is to instruct you to exert yourself to further increase His Imperial Majesty's confidence in you by serving diligently, following the instructions in the imperial order we sent to you.

[582/131, regarding the rekindling of the uprising on Crete] To His Excellency the Governor Egypt [Mehmed Ali Pasha] April 6, 1826

While Your Excellency has extinguished the flame of brigandage on Crete, the reava of Sfakia have recently rebelled, as related in a letter from Mustafa Bey, the commander of the Egyptian forces, and Sührab Pasha, Castellan of Rethymno, to Lütfü Pasha, Castellan of Irakleio. They complained in the letter of severe shortages of men and provisions. There is no need to mention that these infidels always feign peaceful submission, as they know their weakness vis-à-vis the sword of the holy warriors, and then attempt brigandage whenever they seize the opportunity. On this occasion, it is obvious that they realized that there is a lack of troops and provisions on the island and began to engage in abominable deeds. We are sure that you have already taken the necessary measures if the aforementioned castellan informed you about this recent development, for you are in charge of removing the filthy bodies of the brigands from Crete completely; this is obvious from your past record of service, as well as commendable qualities inherent in your personality. Nevertheless, based on the correspondence from Lütfü Pasha and the information conveyed by the courier from the island, the scarcity of troops and foodstuffs at the disposal of the castellan and the aforementioned functionaries led to the recurrence of the rebellion of these infidels. This letter is to ask you to take whatever measures are necessary for supplying the island with men and provisions to restore order, as required by your commission on Crete and your defining qualities of piety and sense of honor.

[582/137, regarding the appointment of Ali Namık Pasha to Nafpaktos and Acarnania] To the Governor of Rumelia [Mehmed Reşid Pasha (Kütahi)] April 8, 1826

We have received Your Excellency's correspondence in which you suggest the appointment of a gallant and diligent vizier as the castellan of Nafpaktos and Acarnania to guard Missolonghi, Nafpaktos, and the Castles of the Morea and Rumelia [Rio and Antirrio], as well as to eliminate the brigands who got away from the sword, who might appear in the vicinity again after the imminent conquest of Missolonghi. You indicate that you would have to rush to your new post in Amfissa and Athens immediately after the conquest of Missolonghi to fight the infidel brigands and promise to assist the appointee in terms of supplies and provisions. We appreciate that you express such a crucial opinion of yours, which is indeed required of your position as governor and commander-inchief of Rumelia with full discretionary powers. It is certainly necessary to put in charge a diligent man with determination who is familiar with the region, in order to protect duly Missolonghi, Nafpaktos, and the Castles of the Morea and Rumelia. Ali Namık Pasha, who is currently located in Manisa with the rank of vizier, is familiar with the local affairs and infidels of that region, which makes him an appropriate candidate for the post. Therefore, His Imperial Majesty appointed him as the castellan of the sancaks of Acarnania and Nafpaktos. However, these sancaks are currently incapable of yielding revenues or supplying troops, and thereby it is essential to assign Ali Namık Pasha a benefice in Rumelia, as he would otherwise be devoid of financial means to carry out his tasks. Ismail Pasha has proved inefficient in administering Vlorë, due to popular opposition against him. The locals even sent a collective petition and a representative to the Sublime Porte to the effect that we should replace him with another Ottoman vizier. When we consulted with you on our response to this demand, you suggested that Vlorë should be placed under Your Excellency for the moment. We understand from your correspondence that your suggestion stems from the need for calming down the popular resentment in this sancak and bears no motivation for advancing personal interest. Yet, this would be an additional burden for you, and thus we have deemed it proper to give Vlorë to Ali Namık Pasha. First of all, he would be able to impose your authority as the supreme commander in the region. Secondly, the resources of this sancak can partially support him in recruiting men and provisions. Moreover, the locals will have no reason to complain about him, as he will manage Vlorë through a mütesellim. As for Ismail Pasha, we suggested that it would be inappropriate to keep him sidelined as a vizier of the Sublime Porte with a long record of service; and, given that there are no vacant posts in Rumelia, we recommended his appointment to a place in Anatolia. His Imperial Majesty has approved our suggestion. This letter is to invite you to convey your opinion on our decision to place Vlorë under the jurisdiction of Ali Namık Pasha, as well as our suggestion about Ismail Pasha. We would also like you to give full support to Ali Namık Pasha, since he would not be able to gather troops and supplies at short notice, which was also a point that you previously made in your correspondence.

Glossary

- Anatolia (Turk. Anadolu) in the early nineteenth century both the name of a geographical region (Asia Minor) and an eyalet [province] in west-central Turkey, with Kütahya as its capital.
- Ayan Muslim provincial power-broker.
- Beşlü agha commander of the troops [beşlü neferatı] in charge of securing Moldowallachia.
- Bostancıbaşı officer responsible for policing a good part of Istanbul, Galata, and the villages along the Bosporus. He was also in charge of the jails in which notable Greeks sent from the provinces were kept in custody during the Greek Revolution.
- Boyar Moldowallachian native aristocracy.
- Çiftlik large agrarian estates with quasi-proprietary rights for their holders, with heavily exploitative relations altering the terms of attachment of the peasants to the land and focusing on market-oriented production.
- Dar al-harb "abode of war," adjoining non-Islamic lands that do not have a treaty of nonaggression or peace with a Muslim state.
- Derbend agha official responsible for the safety of mountain passes.
- Evlad-t Fatihan lit. descendants of the conquerors [of Rumelia]; ethnic Turkish [yörük] mercenary troops from northern Rumelia.
- Eyalet province. Throughout this book, the Ottoman words eyalet and vilayet are both translated as province.
- Fatwa (Turk. fetva) authoritative legal opinion of a Muslim jurist.
- Geg Albanian ethno-cultural group inhabiting areas north of the Shkumbin River (Gegëria, Turk. Gegalık).
- Ghaza and jihad the struggle to defend and extend Islam; war to achieve these goals. By the early nineteenth century, these terms came to be used interchangeably—but mostly together as a formula—in the documents produced by the Ottoman civil and military bureaucracy.
- Harbî enemy; a person not under truce or safe conduct of the sharia rules laid down for non-Muslims.
- Haseki sergeant at arms in the bodyguard of the sultan; an attendant of the imperial court.
- Hızır the day of Hızır falls on May 6 in the Gregorian calendar (April 23 in the Julian calendar, celebrated as St. George's Day by Orthodox Christians) and symbolizes the arrival of spring.

- Imperial stirrup (Turk. Rikâb-ı Hümâyun) part of the outer services (Turk. Bîrun) of the imperial palace, in charge of such duties as transmitting messages between the sultan and various state offices.
- Janissary agha (Tr. Yeniçeri Ağası) the commander of the janissary corps. Jihad see Ghaza and jihad.
- Jizya (Turk. cizye) tax paid by the non-Muslim subjects of a Muslim state.
- Kadı adjudicator of the Islamic holy law [sharia] and civil administrator of a town [kaza].
- Kantar weight unit. 1 kantar equals 56 kg.
- Kapıcıbaşı lit. chief gatekeeper [of the sultan's palace]. In the early nine-teenth century this title was mostly honorary, given even to provincial notables.
- Kapudana bey admiral, second in command of the Ottoman navy after the kapudan pasha [grand admiral].
- Kapukethüda agent. Each provincial functionary had an agent at the Sublime Porte who handled his affairs and correspondence with the central administration. A kapukethüda generally had several provincial functionaries as clients. In the French diplomatic correspondence of the period the *kapukethüda*s were referred to as agents politiques. Throughout this book, the Ottoman word kapukethüda is translated as agent.
- Kasım now November in Turkish. In the Ottoman period the day of Kasım fell on November 8 and symbolized the arrival of winter.
- Kaymakam locum tenens, one filling an office for a time or temporarily taking the place of another.
- Kaza a subdivision of a sancak, seat of a kadı.
- Kethüda steward, majordomo. Second in command of a pasha's household. Throughout this book, the Ottoman word kethüda is translated as steward.
- Ktyye weight unit. 1 ktyye equals 1 okka, which equals 1.28 kg.
- Knez a Serbian kocabaşı, head of a local Serbian community.
- Kocabaşı (Gr. προεστός or κοτζάμπασης) primate, head of a self-governing local Christian community who was responsible for his community before the state.
- Metochion monastic establishment, usually in the form of a property, subordinate to a larger independent monastery.
- Millet an officially recognized religious community; specifically, a non-Muslim religious minority subordinate to the Ottoman state, enjoying a certain degree of autonomy and represented by an official leader.

Mirahur agha master of the imperial stables.

Mir-i miran pasha of two horsetails. Viziers were pashas of three horsetails.

- Moldowallachia throughout this book, Moldowallachia, the anglicized version of the Greek term Μολδοβλαχία [Moldovlachia], will be used to correspond to the Ottoman term Memleketeyn: the Two Domains, i.e. Eflak [Wallachia] and Boğdan [Moldavia].
- Muhafiz military administrator of a town. Throughout this book, the Ottoman word muhafiz is translated as castellan.
- Müstemen foreigners, mostly merchants, who were granted safe conduct in the Ottoman Empire.
- Mutasarrıf governor of a sancak.
- Mütesellim majordomo, deputy, or interim governor and collector of taxes. Naib deputy kadı.
- Nefir-i amm soldiers peasant conscripts who were recruited from the nonmilitary people of the areas around the combat zones when emergencies arose.
- Nevruz the day of the vernal equinox, usually occurring on March 21 and marking the beginning of spring in the Northern Hemisphere.
- Nüzül emini official in charge of overseeing the purchase and delivery of supplies to the army. Throughout this book, the Ottoman title nüzül emini is translated as commissary officer.
- Patrona bey vice-admiral, third in command of the Ottoman navy after the kapudana bey.
- Raiyyet throughout this book, the Ottoman word raiyyet is translated as subjecthood.
- Reaya tax-paying subjects of the Ottoman state. The term came to be used exclusively for non-Muslims by the early nineteenth century.
- Reisülküttab (or reis efendi) Ottoman official functioning as the equivalent of a minister of foreign affairs since the eighteenth century.
- Riyala bey admiral of the lowest rank in the Ottoman navy.
- Rumelia (Turk. Rumeli) in the early nineteenth century, the eyalet [province] of Rumelia encompassed most of what is today Bulgaria, Macedonia,
 - Albania, continental Greece (excluding the Morea), and eastern Serbia.
- Sancak a district or a subdivision of an eyalet [province].
- Sayyid (m.), sayyida (f.) (Turk. seyyid, seyyide) honorific title for descendants of the Prophet Muhammad.
- Şeyhülislam highest-ranking Muslim cleric and administrator of religious affairs.
- Sipahi fief-holding cavalryman stationed in the provinces.
- Sipahi agha commander of the fief-holding cavalrymen stationed in the provinces.

- Sublime State Ottomans never used the term "Ottoman Empire" for their state. The most common terms used for self-designation by Ottoman administrators for their state that we also encounter in the Ayniyat Registers were Devlet-i Aliyye [the Sublime State] and Saltanat-i Seniyye [the Exalted Sultanate].
- Südid Austrian müstemen merchants operating in Moldowallachia. The word originates from the German Schützling [protégé].
- Tosk Albanian ethno-cultural group inhabiting areas south of the Shkumbin River (Toskëria, Turk. Toskalık).

- Vukiyye weight unit. 1 vukiyye equals 1.2 kg.
- Zimmi non-Muslim subject of a Muslim state; mostly used in a judicial context.

Abdullah Hamdullah Pasha, also known as Deli Abdullah Pasha, was the bostancıbaşı between 1809 and 1815. He was appointed grand admiral in July 1819 and served in this post until his resignation in November 1821. He was grand vizier between November 11, 1822 and March 11, 1823, at a critical transition period during the downfall of Halet Efendi.

Ahmed Erib Efendi/Pasha was the superintendent of the imperial arsenal until he was appointed deputy grand vizier in April 1821. In October 1821 he was made a vizier and dispatched to the Morea for having come into conflict with Halet Efendi, who got rid of him by removing him from Istanbul. There is not much information about his activities, other than that he was trusted with the defense of Ypati. He died in January 1823.

Ali Celal Pasha was the governor of Bosnia when he was appointed governor and commander-in-chief of Rumelia on November 20, 1822, following Hurşid Ahmed Pasha's death. He died on December 20, 1822, due to the exacerbation of his illness when he was about to depart from Bosnia to Larissa to take up his new post.

Ali Namık Pasha, a native of Nafplio, was the steward of Hurşid Ahmed Pasha at the siege of Ioannina during Ali Pasha's uprising. He was made a vizier at the request of Hurşid Pasha and appointed as the castellan of Nafplio in June 1821; however, he did not make it to his post until May 1822. After suppressing the uprising in Tzoumerka in October 1821, he was also given the sancak of Trikala, replacing Mahmud Pasha of Drama. In late May 1822 he was at the defense of Nafplio. He was imprisoned in December 1822, when the castle was captured by Greek revolutionaries. In 1825, he was exchanged with Georgios Mavromichalis, son of Petrobey Mavromichalis, who was captured by Ibrahim Pasha at Navarino. After his release he spent some time in Izmir and Manisa until he was appointed mutasarruf of Acarnania and Nafpaktos in April 1826.

Androutsos, Odysseas, called Captain Disava by the Ottoman functionaries, was one of the most renowned heroes of the Greek War of Independence. He grew up at Tepedelenli Ali Pasha's court and was appointed by the pasha as armatolos of Livadeia in 1816. In October 1820, after a dispute with the local rulers, he left and was replaced by Athanasios Diakos. He fought against the Ottoman forces numerous times. His victory at the Inn of Gravia against Ömer Vrioni in May 1821 played a determining role in the fate of the Greek Revolution. In October 1822, the central Greek government appointed Androutsos as captain-general of eastern Greece. Androutsos made Athens his headquarters and became master of the entire Attica region and its environs in the subsequent two years. In early 1825, when conflict between the Greek revolutionary factions escalated to the proportions of civil war, Androutsos came into contact with Ömer Pasha of Karystos and applied to the Sublime Porte for amnesty through him. On March 31, the Governor of Rumelia Resid Mehmed Pasha approved Androutsos's plea for amnesty and sent him a firman. By April 10, the inhabitants of Livadeia, Thebes, and Atalanti requested amnesty. According to Ömer Pasha's account, when the Greek insurgents in Amfissa began attacking the villages around Livadeia, Ömer Pasha dispatched his steward at the head of five hundred cavalry, joined by Androutsos. Intense fighting broke out in the region between Atalanti and Livadeia, and five thousand Greeks came from Athens and the Morea to reinforce the revolutionaries. Androutsos did not leave the steward throughout the thirty-eight days of heavy fighting, but grew anxious when the hostilities intensified and the troops promised by Reşid Mehmed Pasha did not arrive. He wanted to retire to Megara, but the insurgents captured him on the way. Muslim runaways, spies, and Greek informants all confirmed that Androutsos was imprisoned, subjected to all manner of torture, and eventually executed.

Behram Pasha is mistakenly known as Bayram or Beyran Pasha in Greek historiography. He had previously served as governor of Trabzon, Diyarbekir, and Erzurum. He was the mutasarrıf of Aydın and Saruhan when the revolution broke out and was dispatched to the region of Larissa, thence to proceed to the Morea. On his way to Larissa, he proved instrumental in the suppression of the revolution in the region of Thessaloniki. At the Battle of Vasilikon on September 7, 1821, his mercenary army suffered heavy casualties. The battle was a major turning point in the history of the Greek Revolution. The Ottoman forces sent to lift the siege of Tripolitsa and put down the uprising in Attica and the Morea were defeated by the Greek revolutionaries under the command of Ioannis Dyovouniotis and Giannis Gouras. The Sublime Porte was unable to organize another expedition until the summer of 1822, giving the revolutionaries the opportunity to regroup. His vizierate was abrogated, and his troops were given to the command of Süleyman Pasha.

Benderli Mehmed Selim Pasha was the governor of Silistra from March 1819 until appointed grand vizier in September 1824; he served in this position until October 1828. He was most instrumental in the abolition of the janissary complex. Derviş Mustafa Pasha of Plovdiv, governor of Bosnia between 1817 and 1819, was the castellan of Vidin when the Greek Revolution erupted. He was appointed to the governorship of the Morea in January 1824 for only two months until his appointment to the governorship of Rumelia. His anti-Albanian stance put the operations at risk, and he was replaced by Mehmed Reşid Pasha in November 1824.

Dyovouniotis, Ioannis, was appointed the armatolos of Lamia by Tepedelenli Ali Pasha. When the revolution broke out, he became the captain of the revolutionaries in the Lamia region. He fought in the battles of Alamana, Gravia Inn, and Vasilikon; he died in 1831.

Ebubekir Pasha was the governor of Anadolu when the revolution erupted. He was one of the first viziers dispatched to the Morea; however, he died in Lamia in August 1821.

Ebulubud Mehmed Emin Pasha, of slave descent from Georgia, was the mutasarrıf of Thessaloniki until he was appointed to the governorate of Rumelia in August 1823. Following the failed siege of Missolonghi, he was replaced by Derviş Mustafa Pasha in March 1824 and exiled to Didymoticho.

Elmas Meçe was an Albanian warlord in charge of securing Tripolitsa, also referred to as Elmas Meço or Mezzo in historiography. He was the former chief orderly [kapuçukadar] of Tepedelenli Ali Pasha and a member of the Tosk military oligarchy established after Ali Pasha's downfall. He struck a besa [word of honor] with Theodoros Kolokotronis for the safe refuge of the Albanian contingent from Tripolitsa and opened the gates of the town to the Greek insurgents, paving the way to the massacre of noncombatant Muslims.

Halet Efendi was Mahmud II's favorite and advisor. He found favor in the sultan's sight thanks to his aptitude in dealing with the Baghdad revolt of 1810 and established a special rapport with the sultan based on their shared vision of restoring central state authority in the provinces. In the following decade he became the most dominant figure in imperial politics. In January 1820 he brought his associate Seyyid Ali Pasha to the grand vizierate in order to stifle the opponents of a military operation against Tepedelenli Ali Pasha at the Sublime Porte. Ottoman official historiographers explain the unprecedented alarm set off by the Greek Revolution and the ensuing events of public violence in Istanbul as the work of Halet Efendi, who tried to ward off accusations directed against him of creating the present chaos by diverting public opinion away from himself. He was responsible for putting Ibn Khaldunian concepts into practice and also for the most violent measures taken by the Sublime Porte for the quelling of the uprising. He was deposed on November 11, 1822, following the janissary mutiny of November 9. He was exiled to Konya, where he was soon executed.

Hasan Pasha was castellan of Izmir. He was the mutasarrtf of Kayseri when the revolution broke out. His initial instructions were to proceed to Nafplio via Izmir. His orders were changed in May 1821, and he stayed in Izmir until 1827. The Greek historian Filimon noted that his mustache and intelligence were inversely proportional; however, he prevented at least three serious janissary mutinies and acts of public violence against the Greeks of the town from getting out of hand and turning into full-fledged massacres.

Hurşid Ahmed Pasha was an Ottoman statesman of slave descent from Georgia. He served as grand vizier between 1812 and 1815. He suppressed the Serbian revolt in 1813. In October–November 1819 he put down three sizable revolts in Baghdad, Diyarbekir, and Aleppo. In August 1820, when he was in Aleppo, he was appointed governor of the Morea and arrived in Tripolitsa in November of that year. Before taking up his new office, he was ordered to Ioannina to quell Tepedelenli Ali Pasha's revolt. He left Tripolitsa in January 1821 to undertake the siege operations at Ioannina. He was appointed governor of Rumelia in February 1821. He managed to capture and execute Ali Pasha after a 1.5-year siege. When the Commander-in-Chief of the Morea Seyyid Ali Pasha proved too incompetent to quell the Greek Revolution, he took over the task in March 1822. Causing the deposition of Seyyid Ali Pasha, he brought his associate Mahmud Pasha of Drama to the post of commander-in-chief of the Morea in June 1822. He raised a mercenary army composed of forty-thousand Albanians; however, he died in November 1822 before the beginning of the campaign season of 1823. The way in which Hurşid Pasha died remains a mystery. In Greek historiography there are elaborate and detailed descriptions of how he decided to commit suicide by drinking poison after learning about the imperial order for his beheading. The reported reason for the imperial order was that he did not send the slain Tepedelenli Ali Pasha's confiscated treasure to Istanbul in its entirety and saved the larger part for himself. A very trustworthy source, William Meyer, the British consul at Preveza, also conveyed the rumors about Hurșid Pasha's suicide. Be that as it may, not a single Ottoman source is to be found to confirm this story. The documents in this book, the letters sent from Larissa to inform the Sublime Porte about his death by his steward, and also by the naib and notables of the town, all report a natural death. Ottoman forces and functionaries, Turkish and Albanian alike, fell into complete disarray as a result of Hurşid Pasha's death and could not recuperate until the arrival of the Egyptian forces.

Ibrahim Pasha was the son of Mehmed Ali Pasha, Governor of Egypt, born in Kavala in 1789. In 1816–19 he quelled the Wahhabi revolt in Hejaz and was made the governor of Jeddah for his achievement. When the Sublime Porte proved unable to quell the Greek Revolution, his father was contracted with the task on the condition that Ibrahim Pasha be appointed governor of the Morea (April 1824). Due to the fear of Greek fireships and blockade, his navy made it to the Morea as late as February 1825. He captured most of the Morea and was instrumental in the fall of Missolonghi. He suffered a catastrophic defeat at the Battle of Navarino in October 1827, almost entirely losing his fleet. He evacuated the Morea in October 1828.

Ismail Paşo Pasha was an Albanian provincial magnate. An assassination attempt against him while he was in Istanbul provided the Sublime Porte with a pretext for suppressing Tepedelenli Ali Pasha, who was held responsible for the attempt. Ismail Paşo was appointed mutasarrıf of Ioannina and sent on to Tepedelenli. He served in this position until October 1821.

Kallimaki, Skarlatos, had served as the dragoman of the Porte between 1801 and 1806 and voivode of Moldavia in 1806 and between 1812 and 1819. He was a close associate of Halet Efendi and was known as Iskerlet Bey or Kalimakizade Sarı Bey at the Sublime Porte. He was appointed to the voivodeship of Wallachia in February 1821 after Alexandros Soutsos's death. He never left Istanbul to take up his post due to the outbreak of the Greek Revolution. He was saved from execution, because Russia could use his death as a pretext to declare war. He was kept under custody in a Muslim neighborhood in Istanbul, Süleymaniye, to prevent his flight. When the government took notice that he was communicating with foreign agents, he was exiled to Bolu, where he was secretly murdered by Ahmed Raşid Efendi, the mütesellim. His death had to seem to be due to natural causes in order to prevent Russian outrage. Thus, poison prepared by the head physician of the court was sent to Bolu and given to Kallimaki through a plot hatched by the mütesellim.

Köse Mehmed Pasha was Hurşid Pasha's steward. He was appointed governor of the Morea when Hurşid Pasha assumed the governorate of Rumelia and was dispatched together with Ömer Vrioni to quell the Greek uprising in the Morea; however, he never made it there. In 1822 we see him in and around east central Greece, where his operations were paralyzed by Odysseas Androutsos. In March 1822, he was granted the sancaks of Teke and Hamid for income. In January 1823 he was appointed governor and commander-in-chief of Rumelia. He was dismissed from office on August 23, 1823, for failing to organize the operations and replaced by the Mutasarruf of Thessaloniki Ebulubud Mehmed Emin Pasha. During the discussions in the Imperial Council for his removal from office, he was accused of remaining "powerless since the day of his appointment." He was exiled to Gallipoli, where he stayed until his appointment to the governorate of Sivas in July 1824.

Mahmud II, the 30th Ottoman sultan, enthroned in 1808, was the Ottoman sultan throughout the Greek Revolution. The Ottoman Empire underwent fundamental changes during his reign, the elimination of most of the provincial magnates (ayans) and the abolition of the janissary complex being the most significant ones. Although he lost every single battle he went into, he is revered as the initiator of Ottoman/Turkish modernity and remembered for his westernization reforms after 1826. He exercised his sovereign authority through his advisor Halet Efendi in the decade prior to the Greek Revolution and became an autocrat after 1823, stifling all sorts of social dissent. He died in 1839.

Mehmed Ali Pasha was of Albanian descent, born in Kavala. He became the governor of Egypt in 1805 and ruled the country until his death in 1849. He was contracted with the suppression of the Greek Revolution in April 1824 by the Grand Vizier Said Galib Pasha and given the island of Crete and the Morea in exchange. Negotiations with the Sublime Porte almost broke down upon his insistence on the appointment of his son as the grand admiral. He sent his eldest son, Ibrahim, to the Morea at the head of a French-trained and disciplined modern army. After losing a great part of his navy at the Battle of Navarino, he sought a way out of the entanglement. He signed a convention with the British admiral Edward Codrington in August 1828 in Alexandria for the withdrawal of the Egyptian forces from the Morea. All Egyptian forces were evacuated by October 1828, without asking for the permission of the Sublime Porte.

Mehmed Hüsrev Pasha had served as the grand admiral between 1811 and 1818 and later as the governor of Trabzon. He was appointed grand admiral again on December 9, 1822. Dissension between him and Ibrahim Pasha of Egypt reached crisis proportions during the siege of Missolonghi, and Mehmed Ali Pasha threatened the Sublime Porte with withdrawing his forces unless Hüsrev Pasha was discharged. Upon Mehmed Ali Pasha's insistent demands, the sultan removed him from office in February 1827.

Mehmed Resid Pasha was of slave descent from Georgia. He is known as "Kütahi" in Greek historiography, because he was the kaymakam of the sancaks of Kütahya and Eskişehir (mid-west Anatolia) when he joined the forces sent against Tepedelenli Ali Pasha. He was appointed governor of Karaman in August 1821. He was sent to quell the Greek uprising in the region of Arta in late 1821. We find him engaging the Greek revolutionaries in the region of Arta, Souli, and Acarnania until late 1822. In April 1823, the governorship of the sancak of Trikala was appended to the province of Karaman and assigned to Resid Pasha. He was removed from office at the request of the Governor of Rumelia Ebulubud Mehmed Emin Pasha. In January 1824, we find him sojourning in Edirne, whence he was dispatched to Vidin as castellan. In November 1824 he was brought to the governorate of Rumelia, for he maintained a good reputation among the Albanians, to repair the damage caused by the anti-Albanian policy followed by his two predecessors. He arrived at Bitola in February 1825 and at Arta in March. In April 1825 he captured the Makrinoro Defile and in May he laid siege to Missolonghi. He captured Athens in June 1827 after a ninemonth siege. In January 1829 he was appointed grand vizier, with the hope that he could use the experience he gained during the Greek Revolution against the Russians.

Mühürdar Ago Vasiari (Osman Agha, though known as Mühürdar Ago in the historiography of the Greek Revolution) was the seal keeper of Tepedelenli Ali Pasha and a prominent member of the Tosk military oligarchy established after Ali Pasha's downfall. In the words of William Meyer, the British consul at Preveza, Mühürdar Ago became the "natural leader" of the Tosk military oligarchy after Ömer Vrioni's removal from Albania in late 1824. He was appointed the mütesellim of Berat and Süleyman Pasha Vlora's steward as part of the plan to break up the Tosk oligarchy.

Mustafa Pasha, also known as Buşatlı or Bushati Mustafa Pasha, was mutasarrıf of Shkodër and patriarch of the most prominent Geg Albanian dynasty. Throughout the Greek Revolution, he controlled the districts to the north of Berat, where the extent of the Sublime Porte's authority was only nominal. His unwillingness to follow through the Sublime Porte's orders played a determining role in the outcome of the Greek Revolution, especially during the sieges of Missolonghi. He lifted the siege in December 1823 on the pretext of winter weather. The Sublime Porte contracted the suppression of the Greek uprising to Mustafa Pasha for the campaign season of 1824; however, his operations were paralyzed mostly by the counteraction of Tosk Albanians. In October 1825, his three thousand soldiers left the siege of Missolonghi due to the approach of winter.

Nasuhzade Kara Ali Pasha, a seaman of Albanian descent, was the kapudana bey when the Greek Revolution broke out. He was appointed grand admiral in November 1821 upon Abdullah Pasha's resignation from office. He was killed by fireships off Chios under the command of Konstantinos Kanaris on the night of June 18–19, 1822.

Negris, Konstantinos, was the kaymakam of Wallachia when the Greek Revolution erupted. Despite the Sublime Porte's strong prejudice against the Fanariots, he administered Wallachia until he was replaced by the Romanian boyar Grigore Dimitrie Ghica in July 1822. He was detained in Vidin in June 1822 and sent to Istanbul, where he was executed in November on charges of secretly communicating with his brother, Theodoros Negris, who was the president of the Areopagus of Eastern Continental Greece.

Obrenovich, Milosh, was a Serbian leader, the organizer of the Second Serbian Uprising. In 1817 he was recognized as the chief knez (Turk. baş knez) by the Sublime Porte. When the Greek Revolution broke out, he was the leader of the virtually autonomous Serbian principality.

Ömer Pasha of Karystos was the mütesellim of Karystos (as Ömer Bey) when the revolution broke out. Within a year he was made a mir-i miran and was appointed castellan of the sancak of Euboea. He held this office until Euboea was relinquished to the Kingdom of Greece and then settled in Thessaloniki.

Ömer Vrioni, a Tosk Albanian from the village of Vrion, near Berat, began his career as the commander of the forces of the avan of Elbasan [name unknown]. He participated in the quelling of the Pazvandoğlu revolt in 1797 and fought against Napoleon Bonaparte in Egypt between 1798 and 1801. He captured Ibrahim Pasha of Vlorë and incorporated his domains into Tepedelenli Ali Pasha's state in 1810. He was the treasurer [hazinedar] of Ali Pasha until the latter's revolt. In September 1820 he defected to the Ottoman state and was given the sancak of Vlorë in January 1821. During Ali Pasha's revolt, Ömer Vrioni participated in the suppression of the Greek uprising. He won the Battle of Alamana and executed Athanasios Diakos. His march was stopped in May 1821 by the Greek forces under Odysseas Androutsos at the Inn of Gravia. He lifted the 83-day siege of Athens on June 30. After the downfall of Ali Pasha in January 1822, the sancaks of Ioannina, Vlorë, and Delvinë were united under his governorship upon Hurşid Pasha's insistent recommendations. After this date, he followed quite independent policies and remained unresponsive to the Sublime Porte's demands. Ömer Vrioni found himself as the ostensible, unpopular, and incapacitated governor of the Tosk lands, often at odds both with the members of the Tosk military oligarchy, composed of the disgruntled strongmen of Ali Pasha's court, and the heirs of the pre-Ali Pasha Tosk nobility. Ottoman and British sources maintain that the siege of Missolonghi—the epicenter of Greek resistance—in 1823 failed because of his clandestine plots. In the 1824 campaign he followed a policy of tarrying and did not march on Athens, disobeying the Sublime Porte's orders. He was appointed governor of Thessaloniki in December 1824 to distance him from Albania, so that he could not engage in sedition. He initially resisted moving to Thessaloniki, but, having found no support for his cause among the Albanians, he arrived in his new post in February 1825. In late 1827 he was the castellan of Sofia, whence he was sent to Vidin as the commander of the vanguard to encounter the Russian army. In late 1828 he was first sent to Gallipoli and then to Kütahya, where he died in the same year.

Sabit Mahmud Pasha of Drama was of Albanian descent, the son of a dynastic family from Drama, known as Dramalis in Greek historiography. In May 1820 he was appointed mutasarrif of Trikala and remained in this post until October 1821. He was appointed governor and commander-in-chief of the Morea in June 1822 and charged with the quelling of the revolution. He faced catastrophic defeat at the Battle of Dervenakia on August 7, 1822, and could hardly save his life. He withdrew to Corinth, where he died in November 1822.

Samourkassis (Samurkaşoğlu), Ioannis, was the kaymakam of Oltenia when the Greek Revolution broke out. He converted to Islam in Vidin, where he was detained until his death in February 1822.

Seyyid Ali Pasha of Isparta was grand vizier between January 5, 1820, and March 29, 1821. He was a close associate of Halet Efendi. In the eyes of Mahmud II, he was the incarnation of the Ottoman state's troubles, originating from indulging in a life of ease and sinking into luxury and plenty. He was deposed and banished to Gallipoli on March 29, 1821, and replaced by the Mutasarrtf of Ormenio Benderli Ali Pasha. He was appointed commander-inchief of the Morea after the defeat suffered by Behram Pasha at the Battle of Vasilikon in September 1821. He was appointed to this post probably because of Halet Efendi's influence and despite Hurşid Pasha's objections. He proved utterly inept and was relieved from office in June 1822. All his goods and belongings were confiscated and sold in order to deliver the troops' pay that had fallen into arrears. His vizierate was abrogated, and he was exiled to Plovdiv in early 1824 upon the request of Yusuf Pasha of Serres. He died in Istanbul in 1826.

Seyyid Hasan Pasha was at the siege of Ioannina when the revolution broke out and commanded operations on Souli and Arta. He was appointed castellan of Arta in July 1821 and for a short while was governor of Sivas. We find him as the castellan of Euboea in August 1822 and in November 1824 once again as the castellan of Arta. He was relieved of duty in March 1825.

Tepedelenli Ali Pasha was mutasarrıf of Ioannina. He was a Tosk Albanian, born in Tepeleni (Turk. Tepedelen), south Albania. In a progression reminiscent of the establishment of the Ottoman state, he literally conquered the territories of the neighboring Albanian magnates one after another and carved out a state for his dynasty. In 1784 he was appointed mutasarrıf of Delvinë and in 1785 he became the mutasarrıf of Trikala. In 1787 he occupied the sancak of Ioannina, where he made the seat of his government. He acquired Gjirokastër and Libohovë through intermarriages of his family with the local magnates. Taking advantage of the pandemonium of the Russo-Ottoman War, he captured Berat, Vlorë, Kardhiq, and Peqin from their ayans and became the master of the entire Toskëria (the land of the Tosk Albanians) by 1812. By capturing Tiran, Ohrid, and Elbasan between 1815 and 1817, Ali Pasha made himself a bold encroacher on the lands of the Geg Albanians (Gegëria) and utterly annoyed both the Geg magnates and the Sublime Porte. When Ali Pasha moved on to Kičevo, Mat, and Debar in 1819, Mustafa Pasha Bushati, Mutasarrıf of Shkodër, panicked and petitioned the Sublime Porte for Ali Pasha's suppression. The Sublime Porte succeeded in eliminating Ali Pasha after one and a half years of serious strife and almost a year into the Greek Revolution. He was captured and executed on January 24, 1822. Following Ali Pasha's downfall, in most of the Tosk lands the real power remained in the hands of what William Meyer, the British consul at Preveza, called the "Tosk League," namely a military oligarchy composed of disgruntled strongmen of Ali Pasha's court, such as Ali Pasha's sword bearer Silahdar Ilyas Poda, the seal keeper Mühürdar Ago Vasiari, the treasurer Ömer Vrioni, the chief of guards Tahir Abbas, the chief orderly Elmas Meçe [or Meço], and such military chiefs as Derviş Hasan and Sulço Gorça. Being the insurgent Greeks' immediate neighbors and still controlling the most operational military manpower in the region after the disintegration of Ali Pasha's government, their stand against the Greek Revolution was of makeor-break importance.

Vahid Pasha was appointed mutasarrif of Chania in 1816, where he stayed until his banishment to Kos in 1820. He was sent to Chios when the revolution broke out. He was the castellan during the massacres on the island. Accused of inaptitude and misconduct by the Sublime Porte, he was released from duty in May 1822 and exiled to Alanya. He was appointed governor of Aleppo in 1824 and governor of Konya in 1827. He died in 1828. His apologia regarding the massacres on Chios was published in 1873, in which he defended his course of action and portrayed the massacres on the island as the punishment of the insurgents.

Vladimirescu, Tudor, was a Wallachian warlord and the leader of the Pandur militia. He had been in Russian service during the Russo-Ottoman War of 1806-12 and apparently continued to enjoy some liberty of action in Wallachia as a Russian official. Taking advantage of the power vacuum created by the death of Alexandros Soutsos, Voivode of Wallachia, on January 31, 1821, Vladimirescu revolted in coordination with the leadership of the Filiki Etaireia. He enlisted soldiers by exploiting the anti-Fanariot sentiments among the Wallachians. His revolutionary proclamations declared his intention of redressing the grievances which had been brought about by the Fanariots' maladministration and of compelling the boyars to respect the privileges granted by the Ottoman government to the Wallachians. When the Russian government declared its renunciation of the Greek revolutionary movement, Vladimirescu sought to come to terms with the Sublime Porte and to distance himself from Alexandros Ypsilantis. Vladimirescu sent a letter to the castellan of Giurgiu begging for the forgiveness of the sultan and offering his assistance to stop Ypsilantis from entering Bucharest. Vladimirescu claimed that he did not want to be considered a bandit like Ypsilantis; his revolt was against the Fanariots, not the Ottoman state. When Ottoman forces captured Bucharest, he lost control of his troops. After a plot hatched by the Etairists, he was executed by them on May 28, 1821.

Vogoridis, Stefanos, was a Fanariot of Bulgarian descent. He started his career under the patronage of Skarlatos Kallimaki. In 1812 he was appointed kaymakam of Craiova and Galatsi. In 1814 he was appointed postelnik [official in charge of foreign affairs] of Moldavia. He was the kaymakam of Moldavia when the Greek Revolution broke out. He administered Moldavia until he was replaced by the Romanian boyar Ioan Sandu Sturdza in July 1822. He survived the Greek Revolution and was appointed prince of Samos in 1830.

Ypsilantis, Alexandros, is referred to as "the son of Ypsilanti" in many Ottoman documents. He was the son of an eminent Fanariot, Konstantinos Ypsilantis, who had served as dragoman of the Porte (1796–9), voivode of Moldavia (1799–1801), and voivode of Wallachia (1802–6) before he defected to Russia when the Russo–Ottoman War of 1806–12 began. His five sons grew up in Russian military-aristocratic circles, but only Alexandros rose rapidly in the military hierarchy. In 1820 Alexandros, then a 28-year-old major general, an aide-de-camp, and personal friend of Tsar Alexander I, and already a Greek celebrity, assumed the leadership of the secret Greek revolutionary organization, the Filiki Etaireia. He crossed the Prut River on March 6, 1821, invading Moldowallachia and triggering the Greek War of Independence. He fled to Austria after the Battle of Drăgășani on June 19, 1821, where he was kept in custody until 1827 due to the pro-Ottoman stance of the Austrian Chancellor Metternich. He died in Vienna in 1828.

Ypsilantis, Nikolas, was the brother of Alexandros Ypsilantis. He was the commander of the Sacred Band [$I\epsilon\rho\delta\varsigma \Lambda\delta\chi\sigma\varsigma$] in the Battle of Drăgășani. He was kept in custody in Austria until 1827, together with his brothers, Alexandros and Georgios. In 1828 he was allowed to return to Russia, where he died in 1833.

Yusuf Muhlis Pasha of Serres was the son of Ismail Bey, the Ayan of Serres/ Siroz; he is referred to as Sirozî Yusuf Pasha in the documents. In December 1820 he was appointed mutasarrıf of Euboea and Acarnania with the rank of vizier and ordered to join the command of Hurşid Pasha in his campaign against Tepedelenli Ali Pasha. Hurşid Pasha and the spies of the Sublime Porte accused him of setting the functionaries at the siege of Ioannina against each other, thus delaying Tepedelenli's subjugation. He was removed from the army camp in Ioannina and sent to his domain in Euboea through Acarnania. On his way, having learned about the siege of Patras, he crossed to the Morea via the Castles of Rumelia and the Morea and lifted the siege of Patras on April 15, 1821, where he stayed until his discharge from office in November 1825. He was the castellan of Varna when the Russo–Ottoman War of 1828–9 broke out. He was taken captive by the Russians when the town fell and returned to Istanbul in 1830.

Yusuf Pasha of Berkovitsa originated from the town of Berkovitsa (Turk. Berkofça) in northwest Bulgaria. He was the castellan of Brăila when the Greek Revolution broke out and was appointed commander-in-chief to put down the Ypsilantis revolt in Moldowallachia. He was the castellan of Babadag when he was appointed governor and commander-in-chief of the Morea in 1823 with the addition of the sancaks of Teke and Hamid to his jurisdiction. He arrived in Larissa, the major Ottoman deployment base during the Greek Revolution, in early June. He proved inept at organizing the expedition, and by November 1823 his mercenary army had disbanded. He was pardoned at the request of Ebulubud Mehmed Emin Pasha, Governor of Rumelia, and stayed in Larissa until early 1825. He died in 1826 while he was the castellan of Sofia.
